Cynical ceasefire 'just a ploy'

Nato rejects deal as exiles top a million

BY MICHAEL EVANS, TOM WALKER IN BELGRADE AND CHARLES BREMNER

AN OFFER from Belgrade to Tribegin a unilateral ceasefire in Kosovo from 7pm last night was rejected out of hand by Nato government leaders, who claimed it was simply a * ploy to stop the airstrikes.

The sudden announcement - of a ceasefire came after a day in which Nato aircraft carried and the largest number of : bombing sorties so far in the air campaign. The alliance as also warned that the next attacks would be even bigger, piling the pressure on President Milosevic.

The ceasefire announce-... ment was made in a joint statenent from the Federal Yugoday and Serbian govern-nents. It said the 400,000 ethic Albanian refugees in neighpouring countries would be al-

The Belgrade statement also offered a "temporary agreement with Ibrahim Rugova, the moderate ethnic Albanian leader who has been under Yugoslav military "protection" since the bombing began. The temporary temporary arrangement would be the basis for a "final agreement" on Kosovo, the statement said.

A Downing Street spokes-man said: "It doesn't go nearly far enough. Milosevic knows what he has to do and this falls way short of that. Until Milosevic fulfills the conditions Nato

Families are divided and deported

NO ONE would tell sevenyear-old Ardita Berisha why she was being forced out of a country at gunpoint for the second time in a week. She kept asking where they were going as an armed policeman shoved her into an airport bus, deporting the Berishas and 1,500 other confused refugees to Turkey yesterday. Rabia, her mother, began to cry and asked a security guard how her husband was meant to find them as he was stranded somewhere in Kosovo. The guard, his face partially cov-ered by a surgical mask, shouted at her to do as she was told.

The Macedonian Government calls this a humanitarian airlift. But United Nations chiefs threatened to withdraw its funding unless the forced expulsions were stopped and the Government ceases to split families. UN chiefs insisted that officials must register all those leaving Macedonia and the Red Cross condemned the flights because people had no idea they were going.

By last night more than 3,500 refugees had been expelled. They were given no choice about going and there was no attempt to record the names of those forced on to planes at Skopje airport.

where they are going or they will try to make a run for it." Tired and covered in mud. Rabia Berisha clutched the youngest of her five children, ll-month-old Alma, as Macedonian officials pushed and prodded her family towards the first of 14 chartered planes on the tarmac. No one asked to see any family documents just as well as the Serbs took them seven days ago when forcing the Berishas from their

Nobody had bothered to register their names when they were pulled out of a muddy border field yesterday morning so this family never officially existed in Macedonia despite having been stranded here for ten days. Fatlum looked panic-stricken.

"Tell them I want to stay here, as close to Kosovo as possible, to wait for my family," he shouted. Like others who tried to protest, he was ignored. He begged to be allowed to leave his name with an official, asking for it to be passed to the Red Cross. There were no Red Cross or UN officials

US war crimes expert says testimonies show Serbs are carrying out ethnic cleansing policy, Philip Webster writes

WAR crimes and genocide are being committed in Kosovo on a massive scale as Serbs systematically kill or force out the Albanians in Kosovo, according to a graphic account by America's special ambassador on war crimes.

Across the country families are being given five minutes to pick up what they can and clear out of their homes forever. If they refuse, they are shot or burnt, David Scheffer said.

He has concluded that Serb actions in Kosovo amount to "evil" and said that Serb commanders on the ground should understand that they would be pursued for the crimes they are committing.

Mr Scheffer, who reports to Madeleine Albright, the US Secretary of State, spent two days at Brace, on the Kosovo-Macedonia, border last week interviewing refugees.
Without disclosing his identity, Mr Scheffer spoke to about 200 refugees during 16 hours of interviews assisted by an interpreter. In an interview with The Times, he said there was a "remarkable consistency" in the accounts and the pattern of Serb behaviour.

Serb police and paramilitaries entered towns and villages and moved neighbourhood by neighbourhood to car-ry out "ethnic cleansing".

They do this by approaching each home with Kosovo Albanians in them. They do not touch those with Serbs in doors and give residents five minutes to clear out forever." he said. "When the Kosovans are scrambling to pick up anything they can find, food and warm clothing, the police and military 'shake them down' for cash and jewellery.

"Once they are out, the homes are torched - unless the house is a nice or comfortable one, in which case sometimes it is occupied by the military. Those who resist are killed. They are either shot in the home or left inside to burn to death when the house is torched.

"Witnesses told me that there was no discrimination. Elderly ladies are killed or burnt in the same way as young men. No particular sector of society is safe. I heard this account so many times from so many people that it is clearly premeditated and planned. The same pattern seems to be emerging every-

Mr Scheffer said that the refugees were then marched onto buses or to Pristina train station. As they moved out of their towns and villages, the Serbs who have been their neighbours stand on the side of the road applauding their departure. Some refugees said that during the night-time assaults on their homes the soldiers were joined by local

Mr Scheffer said that all the refugees that he had interviewed wanted to return to Kosovo, but most of them wondered whether they could ever again live side-by-side with Serb neighbours who had helped with their eviction.

The ambassador said that another common tactic was that the forced marches were one deviating from the straight marching line would be picked off. "This is a very common tactic to discipline and intimidate the ethnic cleansing process." he said. Another common approach of the Serbs was to force the refugees to drop all the food and

US lulled by Hollywood myth of bloodless war

FROM BEN MACINTYRE IN WASHINGTON

AN AMERICAN soldier is trapped in the combat zone, battling a versatile enemy in hostile terrain: that familiar scenario, repeated in countless Hollywood films from Rambo to Saving Private Ryan, is inching closer to reality in Kosovo as pressure grows to use US ground troops.

A poll published yesterday in The Washington Post showed public opinion shifting dramatically in favour of ground forces going in, with 55 per cent saying they would support a policy change. Just a week ago, barely 40 per cent favoured using US infantry.

Foreign policy experts, politicians and retired soldiers, too, have joined a swelling chorus calling for ground troops, while unnamed military officials have begun popping up in numbers to claim that they had told the Administration from the outset that combat troops would be necessary.

American hero Tom Hanks, right, in Saving Private Ryan

America, confronting the reality that Serb forces will not be stopped with cruise missiles alone, has sent Apache helicopter gunships to strike President Milosevic's army - a decision that has been interpreted as a step closer to sending in troops. The Apaches, supported by 2,000 soldiers, Bradley Fighting Vehicles and multiple rocket launchers, may not technically fit the definition of ground forces, but they are specifically designed to hit troops on the ground or, to use the Pentagon's tag-line of the week, to get "up close and personal" with the enemy.

The decision to use the Apaches has raised further questions about where air combat ends and ground engagement begins. A recent cartoon showed President Clinton filling the Kosovo sky with paratroopers and helicopters, while observing: "Of course it depends what you mean by

Yet the US remains deeply wary of sending such forces across Kosovo's borders, knowing that the first bodybag will send support for action spiralling downwards. The wave of panic that swept the Pentagon and White House during the hours that rescue troops scrambled to retrieve a single downed pilot is an illustration of sensitivity to possible military losses. Here, too. Hollywood has played its part, propagating the myth that war can be fought with minimal casualties. Rare is the movie that shows the embattled soldier-hero dying behind enemy lines; Rambo gets away: Private Ryan was, after all, saved. The same unreal approach is reflect-ed in the polls, which show that more than 80 per cent of Americans believe the US should send a snatch team to rescue the three soldiers held by Belgrade. The story of Scott O'Grady, the US pilot shot down over Bosnia and then rescued, was the subject of a bidding war for film rights, but the equally true story of the US soldiers beaten to death by a mob in Somalia, was not.

In its determination to show that Kosovo will not be another Vietnam. America has oversold the potential of air power. raising impossibly high expectations of success and low expectation of casualties. US officials continue to insist, although less and less emphatically, that there is "no intention" to use ground troops.

Aerial bombardment allows President Clinton to keep control of the script, restricting bloodletting. A ground war, however, would turn this war from American family viewing into a gory epic, with no guaran-tee of that Hollywood happy ending.

THE American decision to deploy the Gulf War-proven Multiple Launch Rocket System (MLRS) in Albania to strike at Yugoslav military facilities will significantly increase the firepower available to Nato commanders.

One of the weapons that Gulf War, the MLRS is an "area weapon system", using powerful rockets to distribute hundreds of high-explosive bomblets within the chosen target location.

There are two versions of the MLRS, the standard one, which has two six-ood launchers firing a total of 12 rockets. esch containing 644 bomblets known as "dual-purpose im-proved conventional muni-tions"; and a later version armed with two Army Tactical Missile Systems (ATAC-MS), each one firing 950 tennis ball-sized anti-personnel and anti-material bomblets.

General Sir Charles Guthrie, the Chief of the Defence Staff, indicated earlier this week that the Americans would be sending the ATAC-MS version because it had a range of about 100 miles, nating much of Kosovo with-in its sights.

Christopher Foss, the editor of Jane's Armour and Artillers, said that the standard MLRS had a range of only about 20 miles, which would limit its scope for strikes into

THE stage in Nato's air campaign has been reached when it is legiti-Operation Allied Force continue? Will another week or ten days of intensive bombing enable the alliance to fulfil its objectives or are the political warnings of a "long haul going to commit Nato to a campaign lasting months? George Robertson, the Defence Secretary, was adamant yesterday that the bombing would go on until President Milosevic had agreed to allow all the ethnic Albanian refugees back to their villages to re-build their homes under the protection of an international force. On that basis, even if the first objective is met, which is to force Mr Milosevic to stop the "ethnic deansing" in Kosovo and to with-draw all his forces, the bombing will carry on regardless. This determination to see it through to the bitter end is clearly intended to send a message to Mr Milosevic that when he comes up with a new "peace" deal, like yesterday's ceasefire offer, it will make no difference to Operation Allied Force unless he agrees to reverse all the damage he has done to the ethnic Albanians in Kosovo. The sentiments are understandable, but since the Ministry of Defence announced yesterday that mate to ask: how much longer can 1.1 million ethnic Albanians have now been forced out of their homes in the 12 months since the conflic began — a large proportion of them driven out of Kosovo itself - it is becoming increasingly clear that this objective is going to be the most difficult to meet, perhaps beyond

If Mr Milosevic's nerve holds up for another few weeks, Nato has to face up to the reality that its bombers will destroy what was already a weak Yugoslav economy, that they will damage the country's infrastructure, possibly beyond repair unlike Iraq, Yugoslavia is not blessed with oil revenues - and that they will help to create a country in Europe which will be a seething cauldron of harred towards the West for decades.

This is not a happy prospect for the beginning of the new millennium, nor is it a happy prospect for the alliance which had hoped to be seen as the world's guarantor of peace and stability, the godfather of crisis management, a force for instead. Nato is finishing off the 20th century with an awesome air war against a leader who has revived all the horrific images of the worst excesses of the Nazis in the

Achieving the right balance in the level of force to be used against Mr Milosevic will be a difficult choice. American officials, before the US-led six-week coalition air campaign in the 1991 Gulf War, talked of bombing Iraq back to the Middle Ages. It was an imprudent remark, wisely ignored by the politi-cal leaders who realised that a totaly destroyed Iraq would create a dangerous vacuum in the region.

Similarly, the total elimination of Yugoslavia's infrastructure, with the destruction of every strategic bridge, oil refinery, power station, rail link and main road, would undermine whatever stability is left in the country once the crisis is over.

This is why Nato must be praying that ten more days will be enough to meet those daily repeat-

However, if it is to be a long-haul bombing campaign - months, not weeks — waged in isolation, with-out the prospect of a land force be-ing sent in to finish off the job in Ko-sovo, the wholesale destruction could begin to look disproportionate, even though, building for building, the Yugoslav military and paramilitary forces have caused more damage to properties in Kosovo, laying waste whole villages, than

Nato has throughout the whole of Yugoslavia.

In the meantime, the principal protagonists on Nato's side - President Climon and his stalwart Defence Secretary, William Cohen, in Washington, Tony Blair, Robin Cook, the Foreign Secretary, and Mr Robertson in London - declare with increasing intensity that the bombing will go on until the job has been done.

Even if Mr Milosevic fails to back down. Nato hopes that its attacks on Yugoslav forces in Kosovo over the next ten days will reduce their capabilities and their morale to such an extent that Kosovo will become what is being called a "permissive environment", in other words an environment in which Nato troops could be inserted with minimum resistance to begin the process of returning people to their

Rebels offer to be Nato's ground force

THE Kosovo Liberation Army yesterday launched a desper-ate appeal for military aid to defend up to half a million ethnic Albanians in villages the guerrillas still hold against the Serb onslaught and vowed to become "Nato's ground troops" in the Balkan campaign. In an interview with The Times somewhere in northern Albania, Xheladin Gashi, a member of the KLA's general staff and a regional command-er, said that his forces needed every kind of weapon.

There are hundreds of thousands of civilians hiding in the mountains and in villages which we control. But they are in pockets and they could soon be overrun. We need weapons to defend them or the Serbs will overrun them," he said.

Listing a group of villages mostly in the west of Kosovo close to the border with Montenegro and Albania, he insisted that time was running out for his fighters who might soon be forced to retreat and leave the civilian population to the mercy of Serbs.

"We can protect our people ourselves. We now have more volunteers from all over KosSam Kiley hears an urgent plea

Nato members have been struggling with how to defend Kosovo's diminishing popula-tion of Albanians against Serb attacks without committing large numbers of ground troops to what would be a bloody campaign. They have been equally reluctant to arm or train the KLA for fear that this would imply a tacit recognition of the guerrilla move-ment's demands for independence from Yugoslavia.

There has been some acceptance that few Kosovo Albanians would ever return home to a country with any kind of a formal tie to Belgrade. But there remains the problem that the KLA has been divided and, since the Serbian attacks, its command structure has been almost shattered.

If the KLA were given weapons, the guerrillas would need close supervision to prevent the guns being turned on Kosovo's Serb minority.

THE plight of Kosovo refu-gees who have been stripped of their papers is being eased by the issuing of temporary documents that certify their identities, the United Nations relief operation said yesterday.

Officials from the UN High are supplying provisional papers on the spot to all deportees robbed of their documents by Serbian forces before being allowed to cross the frontier.

"Taking away identity pa-pers and ripping off car licence plates is as much a waste of time as barbaric. You cannot deprive people of their identity by just taking away spokesman in Geneva. "The simple statement of identity is being treated with the same weight as the actual papers."

The biggest problem con-cerned a small number of unaccompanied children who were too young to know their names, said the UN. Officials were seeking friends and relatives to trace their identities.

Nato and allied govern-ments have accused the Serbians of waging an "Orwellian" campaign to deprive refu-gees of their culture and past by removing all documents and blowing up municipal archives in Kosovo to destroy title deeds, land registry papers and marriage records. Nato reported yesterday being forced to sign away their property rights "in exchange for a train ticket to oblivion". The practice was now well documented and would add to evidence being gathered for the prosecution of Serbian officials for war crimes, said Jamie Shea, the Nato spokesman. Stripping people of their

had no bearing on the selection of refugees being evacuated from the region to other countries, said the UN.

The international relief operation was now insisting that all evacuation flights left with displaced Kosovans could be traced. The UNHCR said it was concerned that the majority of the 1,360 Kosovans who were flown to Turkey on Monday had not been properly registered before they left.

"A special UNHCR team is en route to Skopje to handle future refugee registration." the organisation said yesterday.

Air raids scar city of culture on the Danube

FROM ROGER BOYES IN BONN

NOVI SAD, once known as the Athens of Serbia, has become one of Nato's major targets in its air war against President Milosevic. Yet, as I recall it, there was little of military significance in or around this rambling city, bursting with pubs and full of Hungarians, Slovaks and Romanians drinking coffee in the Viennese rather than Belgrade manner. It was the early 1990s and I was researching a profile of Monica Seles, the tennis player. a Novi Sader of Hungarian origin, and it was plain that the Danube city's military tradition had ended in 1849. Then, the garrison at Petrovaradin, the fortress high above the grey Danube, was under Austrian control but went over to Hungarian rebels under Kossuth. From the fortress they bombarded Croat troops. Two thirds of the city's buildings were destroyed. Some months later, in 1850, a German traveller remarked on "the magnitude of the disaster which has befallen the most admired and well-to-do town".

Now the city is under bornbardment again. On Monday night it was the oil refinery; a few days earlier it was the bridge across the Danube. River traffic is blocked. Nato officials say the bombing of the bridge demonstrated the pinpoint accuracy of Allied weaponry since nearby housing blocks were untouched.

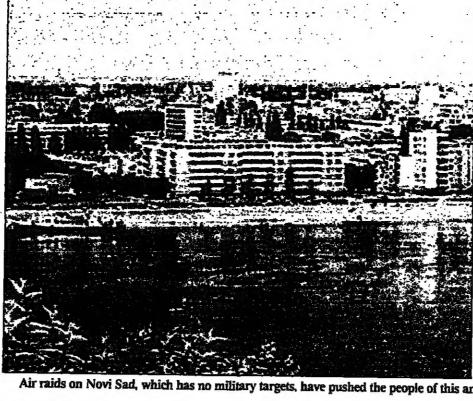

Yet phone calls to friends in the city paint a different picture, neither as grim as Serbian television propaganda portrays it nor exactly a Goya study of misery. But a sense of resemment pervades the city because, despite trying to keep its distance from Belgrade and from Mr Milosevic, it had been punished so thoroughly. Telephone links are now erratic, electricity flickers on and off for an hour or two.

Novi Sad, which means
New Orchard, was the capital of the semi-autonomous region of Vojvodina. Mr Milosevic revoked that autonomy as surely as he ended the rights of the Kosovo Albanians. There was less at stake here for the dictator than in Kosovo, but Novi Sad was seen, nonetheless, as the cradle of the cultural and political rebirth of the third nation. It was from Novi Sad that the Serbs petitioned for their national rights under the Habsburgs.

Novi Sad was always more than a Serbian city. In modern Yugoslavia five languages had official status in the city - Serbian, Hungarian, Slovak, Romanian and Ruthenian. When the necessary ingredient for Mr Milosevic's political demise. Yet the destruction of "military" targets in this proud, tree-lined city is, as could have been predicted, pushing Vojvodina closer to Belgrade.

The splintering of rump Yugoslavia, and with it the end of the dream of greater Serbia, is

Cluster-bombing ends frustration of Harrier pilots

RAF HARRIER pilots used cluster-bombs for the first time against Serbia yesterday, hitting a variety of mobile targets in Kosovo in a daylight blitz hours after scoring "good hits" on a missile store with laser-guided bombs in a separate night raid near Pristina. The officer commanding No 1 Fighter Squadron gave a thumbs-up sign from his cockpit to reporters watching by the runway as he taxied back to the hangars at the Gioia del Colle base in southern Italy after the operation. The wings of his fighter-bomber were carrying only two of the four distinctive green and white cluster-bomb canisters that were slung beneath them when he took off at the head of ten Harriers nearly two hours earlier.

"A few of the pilots that I have spoken to were confident that they hit the targets," said Group Captain Ian Travers Smith, an RAF spokesman. They think they have taken out mobile or moving targets. The weapons they were using were RBL755 cluster-bomb units designed for anti-armour and anti-vehicle type targets primarily. There were a variety of targets hit in Each cluster-bomb canister contains 147 bomblets the size of a beer can that are released when the bombs are dropped. Typically they form a sausage-like pattern that the pilots try to make overlap to cover a large rectangular area with what can be a "devastating" effect on tanks or other armoured vehicles such as those attacking villages in Kosovo, the spokesman said.

The RAF did not immediately say how many bombs were dropped, but reporters counted 20 canisters on five aircraft that took off, but counted only four when they

In the early hours of yester-day, the flyers returned from a separate mission during which they dropped laser-guided 1,000lb Paveway II bombs not far from Pristina in a joint operation with RAF Tornados from Bruggen, Germany. The Harriers scored "good hits" against a building believed to contain stores of surface-to-air missiles, Wing Commander Graham Wright, the detachment commander

The attacks ended a frustrating eight-day period during which the Harriers had been unable to drop bombs, first because of low cloud and then because no mobile targets could be found. "People were over the moon because we had done something productive," Wing Commander Wright said. "It is a huge rush when you see that these things work. There was a release of tension. It is like when a goal is scored in foothall and you think 'Yes'. There was some good banter going

The previous build-up of frustration was underlined by a poster stuck up on the operations hut used by RAF ground staff working on the Harriers. It was a cover of Private Eye magazine lampooning "Win-stony Blair". "Never have so few bombs been dropped on so many," it quoted him saying. "We will not fight them on the beaches, we will not fight them on the hills, we will not fight them on the streets.

They will never surrender." After the raids the mood was different. The pilots are professionals who got the results that they were seeking." Group Captain Travers Smith said. "Today they believe they

'Surgical strike' kills 12 civilians

A SIMPLE MAN, a good labourer, husband and father, Dragan Miladinovic had earned little, but he had won the respect of all who knew

On Monday night the 67-year-old was killed by Nato, with his wife and daughter, as his neighbourhood was flattened by what Brussels calls precision bombing. "He was mincemeat, there was nothing much left of him," said Dragan's closest friend. Vlada Smjilkovic, yesterday, as he stared in disbelief at the pile of rubble next to his own partially collapsed house."We built them together," he added in a monotone, still anaestherised by shock.

A hospital and an old people's home were badly damaged, and there was hardly a pane of glass left intact in the town centre. Nato did land one or two bombs in and around a dilapidated barracks at the town's edge, although yesterday it appeared to have been largely empty.

German pilots in medal dilemma

FROM ROGER BOYES IN BONN

GERMANS, in combat for the first time since the Second World War, face a pressing problem: how to honour the brave in a land without war heroes. Iron Crosses have been abolished - though German Tornados have a vaguely similar cross painted on their fuselages - and there is no medal to pin on the chests of returning pilots.

"For soldiers from France, England, Russia or America it is taken for granted that med-als should be attached to uniforms." lamented Die Welt newspaper. Germany, by contrast, is wary of reviving old military tradition In 1980 a Good Service medal was introduced "for exemplary conduct, and around 6,000 soldiers have won this award. In 1996 a "peacekeeping" medal was established. Both medals have been de-signed to look like harmless prefect's badges. But so far there is nothing to reward combat valour because Germans have not been involved in armed conflict since 1945. Reviving the Iron Cross would be controversial, especially for a Social Democratcontrolled Defence Ministry. The Iron Cross, established by King Frederick William III of Prussia in 1813, had three classes - Iron Cross (second class). Iron Cross (first class) and the Grand Cross. Hitler, who won an Iron Cross (first class) in the First World War, established the Knights Cross, which was po-sitioned between the Iron Cross and the Grand Cross. During the Second World won only by Hermann Goering the head of the Luftwaffe. Yet Germans agree that the Tornado pilots have to be rec-ognised for their daily missions over Serbian territory.

The Government is reluctant to discuss openly the success rate of its Tornados but defence sources say they have been hitting their targets. mainly radar systems. There are always two sides to a war," said one German Army officer. "If we start singing the praises of our pilots, then pacifists will complain and the backlash will be stronger it someone gets shot down While American pilots paint their "kills" on the sides of their FI5s, the German attitude is different: four psychiatrists have been assigned to the Tornado unit in Piacenza to help flight crews cope with their post-bombing trauma.

Clearly the Germans would prefer their combat troops to be regarded as victims of abroader war, in need of count

Parish answers prayers with £½m collection

A PARSON who appealed to his parish for funds to restore the Victorian church hall found the next morning that his plea had produced nearly half a million pounds.

Canon Patrick Whitworth. Rector of All Saints, Weston, near Bath, prayed for divine intervention when he launched the appeal to restore the hall, a former village school built in the middle of the last century. But even he was surprised to find pledges totalling £438,000 in the collection box placed at the front of the church during morning worship.

Officials at the headquar-ters of the Church of England in Church House, Westmin-ster, yesterday described it as another example of the commitment and confidence of the Church today". All Saints, a thriving evangelical parish, is one of the largest and most generous in Bath and Wells, paying about £80.000 in annual "quota" to the diocese. It has a congrega-tion of between 400 and 500 every Sunday, and, besides a rector and curate with stipends paid from diocesan funds, the church employs a youth worker and administrafor from its own funds.

The hall, a Grade II listed building, is to be renovated to create a "mission interface centre", where the church will run

Now we have had all this money pledged to us we will probably be approaching trusts outside the church to raise the difference. It is a fantastic project that will benefit not only local churchgoers but also the local community and I

But Canon Whitworth was undeterred and after obtaining planning permission he set about raising the cash, sending details of the plans to nearly 300 church members. parishioners and villagers.

The diocesan development fund contributed £10,000 and a further £10,000 came in from other charitable sources.

But it was after the collection box was placed at the front of the church during morning worship that the cash flowed in. Canon Whitworth spent a week sifting through the slips from 160 addresses and announced the results at the service on Sunday. Most had pledged cash in signed covenants to be spread over four years, while the 25 members of the church council raised £130,000 between them.

With about £458,000 raised, including cash handed in before the church's "Gift Day"— a concept borrowed from Holy
still need E220,000.

The Rev John Andrews, spokesman for the Bath and Wells diocese, said: "This is one of the larger churches in the diocese. The people are not rich but they are very gener-ous. This is sacrificial giving."

FOR Australians, throwing a prawn on the barbecue will never be quite the same. A giant crustacean previously. unknown to science, is making its debut on the Australian menu. It has emerged from Sydney Har-bour and dates back to the Jurassic era. Marine biologists have been impressed by the power of this ancient variety of Mantis prawn. It is one of the fastest predators on Earth, able to strike its prey with a claw in 5 to 8 milliseconds, inflicting a deep wound. Its speed has earned it the nickname Sun Splitter. While new to biology, the species, which looks like a cross between a lobster, a prawn and a praying mantis, has been increasingly appearing on local fish stalls. Its size alone will impress the neighbours at the next backyard barbecue. It grows to be-tween 20 and 40 centimetres.

The identification of the giant prawn, which has a 200-million-year ancestry, is part of a two-year research project into crustacea in the coastal waters of New South Wales. Marine biologists believe it is one of the most complex invertebrates found.

While the Mantis prawn is a wellknown family of crustacea, this variety has kept out of view. Scientists now plan to use the prawn in neurobiology studies. They are impressed by its advanced eyesight — it is believed to have the most complicated vision of any invertebrate — and its agility. Shane Ahyong, research fellow at the Australian Museum in Sydney, said: "The speed of strike is one of the fastest animal movements." The creature has been named Erogosquilla Grahami after one of Mr Ahyong's collaborators, and Mr Ahyong is in no doubt about the signif-icance of the discovery: "It would be the equivalent of finding a new species

"One of the lessons from this is that we know far less about marine farms than we should," he said.

There is no mistaking the monster prawn in the local fish market. It is more than twice the size of the normal variety. But even if it proves increasingly popular with seafood lovers, there is no immediate danger of sup-plies running out. Erogosquilla graha-mi is abundant in Sydney Harbour. No one has harvested the species com-

Mr Ahyong said that the abundance is a good sign: "It means there is a huge diversity of life in some areas despite other areas that have been polluted quite horribly."

serving life sentences are spending longer in jail than judges recommended because of inefficiency among prison and probation staff, according to a report from Home Office watchdogs.

One man jailed for the murder of his wife should have been released after eight years but has served a total of 24 years because risk assessments, pre-release training and preparatory work have been constantly delayed.

Sir David Ramsbotham, the Chief Inspector of Prisons. and Sir Graham Smith, the Chief Inspector of Probation. said yesterday that jails were often unprepared for release of life prisoners, resulting in a huge waste of time, and that reconviction rates for those released during a life sentence were much lower than for oth-

The Prison Service scheme for handling "lifers" and their release was set up when there was a much smaller number in prison. Sir David said that keeping them in prison longer than necessary was a waste of money and could cause discipline problems within jails.

The pay's the thing for business Bard

Executives will study Shakespeare plays to learn how to tread on the board, reports Alan Hamilton

ONCE more into the boardroom, dear friends, once more, or close the wall up with our English dread of the Bard. A management college is turning to Shakespeare for lessons on how to survive in business. Do you want the art of leadership? Henry V is your man.

Want to know how to avoid being stabbed in the back? Learn from Julius Caesar. Got some dirty work to do and haven't the stomach for it? Have a word with Lady Macbeth.

Cranfield University School of Management in Bedfordshire has teamed with the Globe Theatre in Southwark on London's South Bank to offer courses on what Shakespeare can teach today's corporate executive. The idea is the inspiration of Richard Olivier. director son of the man who set a benchmark in Bardic interpretation.

The people who run today's multinational corporations face the same dilemmas and responsibilities as the kings and dukes of 1600." he said yesterday. "Shakespeare is about power and responsibility. He is not a kitchen-sink drama-

It is hoped that business careerists will pay £1,000 a seat for a two-day course at the Globe, in which they will not only study the moral questions posed by the Bard but also learn basic techniques of acting — increasingly regarded as an essential adjunct to power in the boardroom where role-playing can be a crucial

ing fellow at Cranfield who is helping to run the courses, listed the dilemmas facing the English king before Agin-court: "What right does he does he deal with traitors, and why did he not see the treachery coming? How does he rally his troops and get them to fol-

"Then, as he endures the long dark night of the soul, how much should he role play and how much should he be himself? Then, with the battle won, how do you turn victory into a garden, and how do you nurture yourself in success?

Gentlemen in England now abed will clearly think them-selves accurs'd if they miss the course, to be held in June. But there will be others. Shakespeare's potential for management training is endless, according to Olivier.

Julis Caesar is an obvious one, and not just about backstabbing. According to the course organisers, it is about the positive and negative potential of organisational politics, it is about learning to cope with the fallout of betraval. and it is about the morals of an illegal action and when it is justified. Well, the evil that men do lives after them.

The Merchant of Venice might have lessons for credit card issuers who demand a high annual rates, but it is also a candidate on the Cranfield list for teaching not only issues of justice and mercy but also the difference between male and female perceptions of those ideals. Don't strain yourself, Portia.

Olivier himself is much taken by the didactic potential of

HOW TO GET AHEAD WITH THE RIGHT PLOT

Desired quality: leading an unwilling workforce into a life-or-death sales battle with a rival, when other board members are plotting against you. Study: Henry V

Mity: avoiding becoming obsess its own sake to the extent that your wife encourages you to murder the chairman, Study: Macbeth

Desired quality: knowing what you are supposed to be doing in a business environment that never seems to stand still, with

Desired quality: not letting personal distractions get in the way of business decisions. Standy: Measure For Measure

The Winters Tale, although given its stage direction of "Bohemia, a desert country near the sea" it should perhaps not be taken entirely at face value. But it is a work about the everchanging world, and how, when we are fired for being too old, or too fuddy-duddy, or unable to operate the new computer system, we must accept our fate and move on with good grace: "Bequeath to death your numbness; for from him dear life redeems

And, says Olivier, there are lessons in Measure For Measure on how human and sexual desires intrude on the path to the chief executive officer's chair: "Hence shall we see if power change purpose, what our seemers be."

And then there is Macbeth. which according to Olivier is not so much about getting someone to do your dirty role of becoming obsessed with power for its own sake. And therein lies the difference with Hamlet. Olivier said: What kind of a context does one create in which to take action? Hamlet cannot get clear what his context is, and that is a big question for corporate managers; their parameters are becoming ever less clear." Finally, there is the ultimate challenge of King Lear, which might at some future date figure on the Cranfield syllabus. Lear, says Olivier, is a man who wants to half give up his power, yet does not entirely want to lose control.

And there, in Shakespeare's greatest creation, is the nugget of advice for all business people to heed before their old white heads render them beyond improvement courses: "Keep thy foot out of brothels, thy hand out of plackets, thy pen from lenders' books, and defy the foul fiend."

pilots risked disaster

By ARTHUR LEATHLEY

THE captain of a jet carrying 220 passengers that scraped the ground while attempting to land in a storm apparently relished the challenge and took unnecessary risks, an accident report said yesterday. The captain of the Airtours International Boeing 757 tried three times to land before heading for another airport with low reserves of fuel. The co-pilot, 34, failed to challenge his "flawed decisions" on the flight from Birmingham to the Dominican Republic last year, the report said. The captain is alleged by passengers to have joked as he struggled to bring the aircraft down.

After the first attempted landing the aircraft circled the airport at Puerto Plata. A sec-ond attempt was also abandoned but the captain and co-pilot tried again, relying on their vision rather than using standard instruments in the cockpit. When the aircraft swung round for the third attempt, the captain's spectacles were dislodged. The pilots failed to stabilise the aircraft at the minimum permitted altitude of 400 ft. but continued their attempt, contravening protocol. The plane veered off the runway, scraping on to scrubland.

The report by the Dominican Republic Authorities, published by the British Air Accidents Investigation Branch, said that Airtours had demoted the captain, 53. He and the co-pilot have since undergone further training.

Accident | Helicopter panicked in fog

THE helicopter in which a couple crashed into the sea on Easter Monday had flown low over a holiday camp minutes before the accident, it was claimed vesterday.

Paul Burgess, a millionaire businessman, and his wife, Lisa, 27, who is two months pregnant, were recovering at home in Wooburn Green, Buckinghamshire, after spending 90 minutes in icy water off the south coast.

An official at the Devonbased air traffic control centre that monitored the flight claimed that Mr Burgess. 37, may have panicked after he flew into dense fog and be-camed disorientated as his two-seater Bell Jet Ranger lost height off Charmouth, Dorset. The official, who cannot be identified. said that Mr Burgess got into difficulties soon after taking off. "He was shouting and did not seem to take in the advice he was being given by controllers."

At one stage Mr Burgess had flown 100ft over a holiday camp at Budleigh Salterton in Devon.

The helicopter had then headed towards Dorset, where it was lost on radar. The official added: "He must have gone below a certain height We think he was trying to find a pocket in the cloud and fog but was getting more disorientated and panicky."

Sweet salesman ''had sticky fingers'

By A CORRESPONDENT

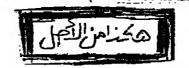

A SALESMAN stole more than a million sweets from his employers, a court was told yesterday.

Sidney Hamilton should have had more than two million penny sweets in his lockspot check but they found almost half were missing. Exeter Crown Court was told that the 37-year-old sales representative supplemented his commission by selling them and pocketing the money. Hamilton, of Kingsteignton, south Devon, denies dealing 411.000 worth of sweets from Wisepenny Ltd over ten months in 1997. Geoffrey Mercer, for the prosecution, said that Mr Hamilton ordered sweets each week by telephone and they were delivered to his lock-up premises in Newton Abbot. "In October 1997. the regional sales manager carried out a stock check and found the value of stock to be about £11,500. He should have had nearly £23,000." He said that Mr Hamilton must have sold the sweets and kept the money

Suspects hear grim toll of bomb victims

FROM STEPHEN FARRELL AT CAMP ZEIST

ONE by one, all 270 names of the Lockerbie bomb victims were read out yesterday to the two Libyans suspected of blow-ing up Pan Am Flight 103.

On their first full day in Scottish custody Abdel Basset Ali al-Megrahi. 46, and Lamine Khalifa Fhimeh, 42 sat for two hours as Dumfries and Galloway police, pausing for translation, read out the detailed warrant outlining the charges against them.

They were then fingerprinted, photographed and provided DNA samples before appearing separately before Graham Cox. QC. Sheriff Principal of Strathelyde South. Durnfries and Galloway.

The five-minute hearing took place at Camp Zeist, the 100-acre former US Air Force base in The Netherlands where the pair will be tried under Sconish law. Hanging on the wall was a myal mat of arms, made of polystyrene, which had been brought from

The men made no pleas and were committed for further examination until a hearing next week when committal proceedings begin on charges of murder, conspiracy to murder and contravention of the Aviation

TRIAL

Each was accompanied by a Scortish advocate, solicitor and Libyan representative, and spoke in Arabic only to confirm their names. The hearing took place within the police station where they were taken after being delivered to The Netherlands from Libya by the UN on Monday night.

Neither man wore handcuffs and the sheriff and the advocates were not wearing wigs, in keeping with usual procedure at committal hearings in chambers.

Scots guards go Dutch until trial begins

By STEPHEN FARRELL

THE HM Prison sign is up and Celtic's results are on Ceefax, but the guard dogs and the breakfast sausages are still Dutch in this patch of The Netherlands that has become a temporary sliver of Scotland.

Few of the 200 Scottish police, prison officers and support staff guarding the two prisoners in Zeist will ever see the suspected Libyan intelligence agents whose trial is the reason for everyone being on this 100-acre site near Utrecht. The pair are kept deep within the former air force camp on the wooded site.

The men entrusted with the task of arranging the guard on them until the trial, expected next year, are Detective Chief Superintendent Tom McCulloch of Dumfries and Galloway Constabulary: Jim Ballantyne, the newly appointed governor of HM Prison Zeist, and his deputy. Eddie Gordon. With them are police from all eight Scottish forces, who are assigned for 12-week stints. spending alternate weeks in The Netherlands and at home with their families.

Prison offices will serve similar rotations, but fortnightly. All will live on the base, surrounded by a barbed-wire perimeter fence and patrolled by guards with sub-machineguns and bulletproof jackets. Canine security is provided by Dutch alsatians to avoid quarantine difficulties. Although there is no bar, drink will be available when the camp is fully up and running.

The Dutch caterers in the canteen ensure there is little distinctive Scottish flavour to mealtimes, with a typical breakfast consisting of eggs. Dutch sausage, bread, cold meats and tiny packets of Rice Krispies and cornflakes. The canteen does, however, have cable television which broadcasts BBCI and other English and foreign language channels. Football fans are already querying whether Manchester United, Celtic and Rangers fixtures will be screened and others are setting up a sports and social club to play Dutch teams. Conditions for Mr al-Megrahi and Mr Fhimeh are similar to those of Category A remand prisoners in Scottish jails, atthough their cells are about twice as large. They have a window but no television, and the bath and shower are outside the cell The Libyans will wear their own clothes and will be allowed a few possessions such as books and newspapers, but probably not radios. They will be permitted visits by anyone granted security clearance.

LIBYA is poised for a swift return to the international community. Tourists are looking forward to a return to some of the finest beaches on the Mediterranean, while British businessmen are preparing to sign huge oil and airline contracts.

The suspension of United Nations sanctions has opened the door to tourism in a country ready to welcome back Europeans. Libyan Arab Airlines announced vesterday that it was considering a resumption of international flights, and will publish a new schedule today. An application for a new licence to land in Britain is expected soon.

Libya, which is three times the size of France but has a population of barely five million, boasts some of the finest Roman ruins in North Africa and sweeping beaches that have seen hardly a tourist for the past decade. Leptis Magna, with its paved streets, colossal cornices and a monumental arch, was once a city to rival Rome, and the birthplace of the Roman emperor Septimius Severus. Libya hopes it will swiftly draw Europeans back in their thousands.

Some of the first to visit will be veterans of the Second World War and the families of Allied soldiers buried in Libya. Previous attempts to organise reunions and pilgrimages were hampered by poor political relations and the lack of air links.

A resumption of flights will also boost trade. Britain is well placed to clinch big export orders for new oil industry equipment. In recent months, Libya has also been holding talks with British Aerospace on what is believed to be a large order.

independence by stealth, reports Jason Allardyce

THE CAMPAIGN to win control of Scotland's first parliament in 300 years began yesterday with Labour accusing nationalists of hiding their plans for independence.

Donald Dewar, the Scottish Labour leader, opened his party's election campaign by accusing the Scottish National Party of an "exercise in dishonesty" over its plans for a refer-endum on independence. His comments, which infuriated the SNP leadership, were prompted by the nationalists' decision to put their commit-ment to independence and a referendum within four years at the bottom of a ten-point pledge card. Other low-key issues, including abolishing Privare Finance Initiatives and commitments to land reform. featured more prominently.

Addressing a rally in Edinburgh's Parliament Square, Mr Dewar said: "This must be the first time in political history that a separatist party has tried deliberately to conceal its sole purpose for existing.

"I say to the SNP that you can tear up your ten points but what you must do above all is start telling Scotland the truth. If they win on May 6 I believe they will start filing for an expensive and messy divorce from Britain."

Mr Dewar said that the SNP had already made clear that it they would begin negotiations on independence the day after they won the elec-

The decision on independence is a decision made in a referendum. It has to be made in a straight question - it has to be a straight yes or no."

Mr Dewar said that Scots faced a stark choice at the polls between social justice and a divorce from the rest of Britain that would raise taxes and cost

"What we are seeing now is an attempt at a disordered retreat and an admission that the one reason for their existence is the reason on which they cannot be elected ... They are now a party that will say anything to win," he said. Mr Dewar also praised the work of Tony Blair and the late Labour leader John Smith, which he said had played a vital role in achieving

Mr Salmond said that Scots would judge the issue on their own experience in hospitals, housing schemes and classrooms, and accused Labour of being run by "remote control" from London.

He rejected suggestions that a second-place finish would better suit the party's longterm goals by allowing them to mount effective opposition to a fledgeling Labour executive. The SNP is trying to win this campaign and win it for Scotland and we have put forward policies that we believe the people of Scotland will rally to in the next four weeks."

Salmond dismissed

played down speculation about their role as potential power brokers in the Scottish parliament when they aunched their campaign with a pledge to double spending on school books and equipment (Gillian Harris writes).

The Liberal Democrats

Jim Wallace, the party's Scottish leader, who is expected to form a coalition government with the largest single party at Holyrood, said that his party would enter coalition talks once the votes were counted. But he repeated his promise that the Lib Dems would not form a coalition with any party advocating a referen-dum on independence during the first term in office, effectively ruling out partnership with the SNP.

Building block falls

The Government is expected to pay more than £400,000 for three former council houses that stand in the way of the new Scottish parliament building in Edinburgh. The price has been agreed after almost a year of negotiations with Edinburgh City Council and two private owners who bought the properties under the right-to-buy legislation. One estate agent described the 1950's terraced homes as "unprepossessing and architecturally unfashionable" and worth little more than £50,000. The Scottish Office has refused to confirm the purchase price but said that a deal had been struck and the properties would now be demolished. The council's property services committee is expected to agree to sell one property to the Scotlish Office for £117,000. It is understood that the private owners will be offered about £150,000 each.

Scargill misses launch

Arthur Scargill yesterday cancelled his speech to launch the Socialist Labour Party's manifesto for the Scottish Parliament election campaign. Mr Scargill, a founder member, rang party colleagues an hour before he was due to speak in Glasgow to say that he could not attend because he was negotiating a pay rise for National Union Mineworkers' members employed by RJB Mining. The SLP has pledged to abolish unemployment and double the minimum wage if elected to Holyrood. The party, which expects to win two or three seats, plans to wind down the nuclear industry and develop wave, wind and solar power, as well as lobby Westminster to abolish VAT and raise corporation tax.

The musculoskeletal condi-tion is caused by gripping the telephone between the head and shoulders, leaving both hands free to use a keyboard and take notes. A study published today by the health sciences department at Surrey University says that this posture increases the risk of nerve compression in the neck and shoulder, with consequent problems in the spine, arms and hands.

Another potentially dangerous posture involves leaning forward, away from the back of the chair, while taking a call. The study says this puts greater pressure on the spine back problems. The two-month

HOW TO RELIEVE THE STRAIN

Headsets remain the most effective of hands-free telephone operations, with more than six million in use worldwide. BT offers three types of headset, priced from £59.99 to £129.99. For £187.94 BT sells an adaptor that converts any modular telephone into a headset and handset work-ing while its £50 Holdaphone allows the normal handset to be attached to a flexible arm.

Another option is the phone rest, a cradle-style attachment that sits on the shoulder and allows the caller to use both hands without contorting the spine. Ericsson and Nortel Networks are among telecoms suppliers researching this simple pain-relieving method.

Elizabeth Simpson, the report's author, said: "Unlike manual worker safety, the issue of occupational injury among office staff is still not ployers. This is partly because the injuries caused by bad telephone habits cannot be seen

of these common problems." Anthony Hopkins, a neurologist and director of research at the Royal College of Physicians, found that using a phone while driving oxid bring on a condition he called mobile users' shoulder droop. One of his patients lost the use of his right arm for a month after spending two hours on his mobile phone. A nerve in the neck was damaged by being compressed by the handset.

Doctors at a Paris hospital treated a 36-year-old woman with severe neck pain and ring-ing in the ear. They found that blood had become trapped in her neck artery while she made a half-hour call on a cordless phone that she wedged under her chin while ironing.

Anyone who combines telephoning with other tasks, including driving, increases neck and shoulder tension by 41 per cent, according to research by the institute for Treatment and Prevention of Repetitive Motion Injuries at Santa Clara Valley Medical Centre in California.

Hours spent using a telephone while also typing risks causing painful nerve damage

Vegetarians should watch what they drink

BY HELEN RUMBELOW

ONLY half of all wines are suitable for vegetarians but this is rarely stated on the bottle, a report by the Consumers'

Association says today.

Dried ox blood was traditionally used to clarify wines. Now producers are likely to use gelatine, from beef, or isinglass, from fish, to remove the residue. For vegan wine, manufacturers have to avoid other clarifying agents such as egg white. Instead they use clay or leave the wine unfiltered.

Widespread confusion over labelling among producers and drinkers, means that organic wines and those suitable for vegetarians and vegans of ten fail to make this clear.

"France is the biggest pro ducer of organic wines but that is because they are largely small family-run concerns that have always made wine in a traditional way, without pesticides. It often takes someone else to come along and no-Susy Atkins, Editor of Which? Wine Guide and author of the report in Health Which?, said

Nerve centres damaged by a twisted spine

TWISTING the neck in order to hold a telephone without hands puts pressure on the spine, contorts it and will expose any nerve root vulnerability caused by disc problems.

The point at risk from a badly clasped telephone is that at which the neck and shoulder meet the "salt cellar" dips above the collar bone. Here, nerves emerge from the neck vertebrae to form the brachial plexus, which supplies nerves to the arm, neck and upper

Nerve roots can be impaired by pressure, which is commonly the result of an injury to the intervertebral discs. Nerve root damage can result in pain. loss of sensation or loss of muscle power in the area supplied by the nerve roots. Another possible explanation for nerve damage follow-ing a telephone neck injury is that it may be caused by prolonged pressure on a nerve that is pressed between the plastic of the handset and the bone and hard tissue of the neck. This type of injury is more commonly observed when someone has been sleeping deeply and a comparatively superficial nerve has been caught between a bony part of the body - such as a shoulder. elbow or knee - and a chair or bedhead. A drunken person who falls asleep with their arm over the back of a chair, can damage the radial nerve in the upper arm.

Neck problems related to telephone use have been described before, but discomfort in the lower back brought on by leaning forward while using a telephone is a new observation by the Surrey researchers. This pain is similar to that induced in men who have lumbar disc troubles when they stoop forward to peer at themselves in a shaving mirror.

Pain may be eased if the chair and telephone are placed so it is not necessary to lean for-ward. The ideal solution would be to correct faulty posture by learning the Alexander technique or Pilates exercises. Once the damage is done, however, patients may have to wear a neck support. Persistent pressure on a nerve root or compression of the cord could also necessitate surgery.

Scientist plugs his TV into the bath

A BATHFUL of hot water will generate enough electricity to run a television for about two hours, a professor at Cardiff University has proved.

Michael Rowe said: "Instead of letting waste water run down the plughole, you can take the heat out of it and create electricity. Professor Rowe, who used a 19th-century invention, the thermocouple, to turn the heat into power, believes there is a big future in generating elec-tricity from waste heat. A thermocouple is a simple device two wires of different metals joined at their ends to form a loop. When one junetion is hot and the other cold. electricity flows around the loop. In a central heating system, for example, a thermo-couple placed between hot and cold water pipes will gen-erate enough electricity to drive the pump.

Nannies 'must agree not to hit'

By ALEXANDRA FREAN SOCIAL AFFAIRS CORRESPONDENT

PARENTS should employ people to look after their children only if they agree not to smack them, the Government advised yesterday.

In a 20-page booklet, Need A Nanny?. it says it is important for parents to discuss "positive discipline strategies" with prospective nannies, "A trained childcare worker would never use physical punishment as a form of discipline," it adds.

Campaigners for anti-smacking laws said yesterday that if professional childcarers, acting in place of parents, were not allowed to smack, then parents should also be banned from doing so. Alan Coombe, from the Barnado's charity, said: "Physical vio-lence against children is never acceptable, whether administered by a nanny or a parent." Margaret Hodge, junior Educa-tion and Employment Minister, who oversees policy on childcare, said that the Government was not trying to preach to parents about what to do in their own home, but most parents would not find it acceptable for their nanny to smack their children. "People who do a childcare course will be ise Sullivan, the Australian nanny, trained to use strategies other than smacking," she said.

The Department of Health has promised to curb the right of parents to hit their children with an implement, such as a cane, but has stopped short of outlawing smacking. After a ruling in the European Court last au-tumn that British law on corporal punishment failed to protect children's rights, it is drawing up a con-sultation document on what kind of smacking should be allowed.

Yesterday's guidelines on hiring nannies come two months after Louwas convicted at the Old Bailey of killing a six-month old baby in her care by shaking her.

The booklet informs parents that they will soon be able to use the new Criminal Records Bureau to vet potential employees. The bureau, which should become operational early next year, will list people deemed to be unsuitable to work with children.

Need a Nanny?, which will be distributed free in doctors' surgeries, libraries and supermarkets, advises parents to check any unexplained gaps in an applicant's work experience and to check all references with previous employers and teachers over the telephone or in person. Employers are also advised to choose namnies with qualifications from recognised childcare organisations. Officials are also drawing up a code of conduct for nanny agencies, and those that sign up to it will get a government seal of approval.

Need a Nanny? can be obtained free of charge by telephoning 0845 6022260 or e-mailing dfee@prologistics.co.uk Ref: NANGP. It will shortly be available on the Internet at www.djee.gov.uk/nanny/index.htm

WORLD IN BRIEF

Churches closed in protest at violence

Nazareth: Churches were closed for 48 hours yesterday in an unprecedented protest against attacks on Christians by Muslims (Christopher Walker writes). The violence in the town, which is home to 42,000 Muslims and 18,000 Christians, is the most serious in the Holy Land for many years and could wreck plans to make it a centre of millennium celebrations. Riot police patrolled the streets and vigilantes guarded churches as Christian leaders, who ordered the closures, called on the Israeli Government to take steps to halt the violence, which began over rival plans for land close to the Basilica of the Annunciation.

Iraqis executed

Bashdad: Four Iraqis, including three dergymen, have been hanged for the murder of the country's Shia Musing leader and two of his sons, an official statement said yesterday. The men were shown on state television last month con-fessing to shooting Grand Ayatollah Mohammed Sadiq al-Sader and his sons in February, but exiled opposition groups said one of them had been in jail since 1991, (AP)

Call for guerrilla war

Jakarta: Xanana Gusmao, the East Timorese independence leader, has called for a resumption of the guerrilla war against Indonesian forces in the occupied territory (Pa tricia Nunan writes). Gusmao's lawyer said that he would withdraw the call to arms if a UN contingent was deployed to stop attacks by pro-Indonesian militias that have killed scores of civilians in recent mouths.

Forgers' $1m a week

Cali: A gang of Colombian forgers who are said to have made more than $1 million (£620,000) a week by bleaching 10 Bolivares notes, worth 10p. and reprinting them as near not bouvares notes, worth top, and reprinting them as near-perfect US$10 bills have been arrested by police after a tip-off (Gabriella Gamini writes). Much of the money was used to launder drog profits. The US Treasury Department said that the fakes had been entering America for three years.

Magician buried alive

New York: David Blaine, a 25-year-old magician, was buried alive in a see through coffin where he has vowed to remain for a week as a test of his will. He has prepared for the stant by learning to put himself into a trance-like state and spending four days a week in a coffin in his living room. Blaine will have no food and three to four table spoons of water a day. Fresh air will be pumped in. (AP)

Velázquez grave found

Madrid: Historians say they have located the remains of the painter Velazquez under a Madrid street. If confirmed, the bones will be moved to a more suitable site to mark the 400th anniversary of his birth this year. His crypt was originally under a church that was demolished when Napoleonle forces invaded Spain. Previous attempts to find the site. in 1845 and 1960, failed because of faulty maps. (AP)

Tycoon faces arrest

Moscow: A warrant has been issued for the arrest of Boris Berezovsky, the tycoon who helped to finance President Yeltsin's re-election in 1996, on charges of money laundering and illegal entrepreneurship. Mr Berezovsky is accused with Nikolai Giushkov, Aeroflor's former deputy director, of si-phoning off billions of dollars from the airline's profits. Mr Berezovsky, who is in France, denied he would seek asylum.

Crime boss pleads guilty

New York: John Gotti Jr., head of America's largest crime family, entered a surprise guilty pica on the eve of his trial on racketeering charges (James Bone writes). Gottl Ir faces a maximum sentence of seven years. Prosecutors said his guilty plea meant the death knell for the Gottis' 15-year rule over the once-feared New York crime family. Gotti's father, the former head of the clan, is serving a life sentence.

Teachers call for bar on unruly pupils

BY A CORRESPONDENT

A TEACHER told yesterday how a four-year-old boy was excluded in his first week at school after bling 16 children and four teachers.

Dave Battye said he was called in to a South Yorkshire school as a teachers' union representative just two days after the boy's arrival.

He told delegates at the Na-tional Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers' conference in Eastbourne that the boy was unteachable, and joined calls for disruptive children to be kept out of mainstream schools.

The union criticised the spread of special units within schools designed to deal with disruptive pupils. The Government is planning more of the units as part of its strategy to reduce the soaring level of school exclusions.

Mr Battye, a member of the union executive, told the con-ference that teachers should not be expected to teach children who did not want to

"This is not an educational problem. We deal with educational problems. This little boy at four going round biting members of the public at random was not an educational problem. His mouth watered when he saw dinner ladies."

The boy bit seven pupils and two members of staff on his first day. He bit nine pupils, the head teacher and the deputy head on his second day, beare being excluded. Mr Battye rejected the view of educationists who blamed bad behaviour on difficulties children had in coping with their school work.

Delegates backed a motion condemning the "chaotic agenda of pupils who respond nei-ther to authority nor to ambi-tion". They said units for disruptive children, "sin bins". should not be used as an alternative to permanent exclusion.

Delegates also criticised plans to set targets for cutting the number of exclusions.

Jim Prior, a delegate from North Lanarkshire, called for legislation to make parents more responsible for chil-dren's behaviour. "The time for namby-pamby education theories is over," he said. ☐ England's three main classroom unions should hold a joint ballot to convince ministers of the strength of opposition to plans for performance-related pay, Doug McAvoy, general secretary of the Na-tional Union of Teachers, said yesterday. In his closing address to the NUT's conference in Brighton, he said that the Government's decision to make the new teacher appraisals voluntary in their first year was not sufficient to head off the union's campaign of industrial action.

Railtrack's three-storey stone building has been unoccupied for 15 years. Officially described as a stair tower, it is set into an embankment on the line between Leeds and Manchester. It links the platform built high on a viaduct over a tributary of the River Calder, which is also Grade II listed, with the valley floor. A modern flight of steps allows travellers access to the unmanned station.

Mr Green said: "Bearing in mind the enthusiasm and excitement this project has generated, we would appreciate it if Railtrack would be more communicative and co-operative with us."

A spokeswoman for Railtrack said yesterday: "We inherited a great deal of property from British Rail when it was privatised, and we have consider how best to maxim-

Weight of the law bans diet advert

BY CHRISTINE MIDDAP

THE full weight of the law turned against the Yummy Yum Yum Diet yesterday. The Office of Fair Trading won a High Court injunction to stop slimming advertisements that had claimed that certain foods could burn fat or cleanse the body of impurities.

John Bridgeman, the Director-General of Fair Trading. said: "Advertisements that of fer false hope and prey on the vulnerabilities of people are particularly offensive."
The injunction against Top

20 Ltd of Regent Street. London, stops the company making certain claims in its advertisements for the Yummy Yum Yum Diet. It had claimed that the diet would allow users to lose specified amounts of weight in specified times and that it was effective in cleaning the body of impurities. It also promised increased energy and reduced risk of serious illness and said that certain foods burn fat from the body.

The diet was advertised through unsolicited faxes that invited recipients to dial a premium-rate fax number to receive a diet sheet two to four pages long. The cost was £1 per minute and it took four to nine minutes to receive.

"This is not the first time that I have been forced to go to court to stop misleading slimming ads," Mr Bridgeman said."I warn anyone who continues to produce such advertisements and ignores rulings from the Advertising Standards Authority they should expect to hear from my office."

Personal Finance Editor Anne Ashworth reports on how to make the best of your savings; why the lottery is a waste of money; how credit agencies view your have not been this low since when Twiggy first sidled down the catwalk in Mary Quant designs. This is the sort of detail that leads the more extrovert building society chief executive to do an impersonation of a young Mick Jagger, But ask the same man about the rates available on his organisation's savings accounts and he will suddenly lose the swagger and all sense of history.

Easy Money, however, notes that the decline in mortgage rates which began late last year has resulted in an even swifter fall in returns on savings. Rates on bank and building society savings accounts, in which millions of us have between £1 and £100,000 last at their curlevel in 1874. For the Quant mini, substitute Charles Worth crinoline: for Harold Wilson, Вепjamin Disraeli: for Jagger, Johann Strauss.

The happy Sixties saver earned an average of 5.78 per cent on his savings. But the average rate payable today on a basic instant access account is 1.57 per cent, below the rate of inflation of 2.4 per cent. This means that your stash of cash could be losing value as it is not keeping pace with increases in the cost of living. The knowledge that you have even a little money in an account is usually the source of considerable reassurance. But returns such as these would make even the preternaturally thrifty feel disaffected.

Once tax is taken into account, the picture becomes even gloomier. Tax at the rate of 20 per cent is automatically deducted from savings interest before it is added to your account - the rate of 1.57 per cent becomes 1.26 per cent for most taxpayers. For the two million people on the higher rate of tax, this is further reduced to 0.94 per cent.

Some accounts from high street banks pay much less than the average, offering savers as little as 0.50 per cent before tax. Your £5,000, amassed from much self-denial, would spending habits earn only £25 in a year. Rates on smaller balances can be more exiguous still. Place £100 in Abbey National's Instant Saver and you will earn just 0.2 per cent interest.

It would be easy to conclude that savers will soon be paying banks for the privilege of depositing money, but the de-cline in returns may be slowing. There is speculation that the Bank of England's Monetary Policy Committee may cut the bank base rate tomorrow by a further 0.25 per cent to 5.25 per cent.

Britain's II million homebuyers will not necessarily re-ceive the full benefit of any decrease as there is a new desire to safeguard the interests of the nation's 19 million savers. They include the elderly, who need extra income to supplement pensions; and the young, who want to buy homes and need to see their money grow. If you are a saver who falls into the homebuyer category then you may feel that meagre rates for savings are a reasonable price to pay for cheaper mortgages. Shame on you for such defeatist talk. You can swap your lean, mean rate for a big-andbeefy 5 to 6 per cent even if you have only El. The secret is to stop queueing in branches and start organising your savings by post or over the phone.

The 5-per-cent-plus average instant access rate of 1966 reflects the very different savings scene of that era. People accessed their accounts over the counter in high street branches and schemes varied little from one bank to another.

The 1.5 per cent instantaccess account of 1999 retiects the waif-like rates payable on thousands of branchbased accounts. Insiders explain that these rates are set at the lowest possible level to deter the public from visiting branches that are expensive to run. Most institutions reserve

Some building societies and the banking arms of insurance companies and supermarkets now provide the best deals. Egg, the banking arm of the Prudential, offers 6 per cent on £1 or more. This includes a 0.5 per cent bonus paid until the end of 1999. Egg guarantees that its rate will not be lower than the Bank of England base rate until January 1, 2001. The account can be operated by phone or post. Virgin Direct, the financial services arm of the Branson conglomerate, offers 5.75 per cent, again on £1. The Yorkshire Building Society Postal Saver account pays 5.50 per cent on balances of more than

■ Today's savings "best buys" may be downsized tomorrow. Beware the deception practised by some banks, where a new account with a similar name to another in the existing range is periodically launched. The rate on the old account is then quietly decreased. Under the Banking Code of Practice, information about changes to branch-based accounts must be available within three days by telephone or on the Internet. Holders of non-branch-based accounts get a letter within 30 days.

Everyone says they are saving for a rainy day, but some have set aside enough money to cover a monsoon season. At the same time they owe money on credit and store cards, overdrafts and personal loans.

The rates of interest payable on such debts, averaging 20 per cent or so, are far higher than those paid on even the most generous accounts. Without the burden of such borrowings, any period of unemployment would be more bearable. While keeping aside an emergency fund, use some of your savings to repay your "flexible friends". Those oppressed by their mortgage could also re-pay a slice of this debt. A £70,000 repayment loan at 6.95 per cent with the Halifax costs £480.94 a month. The total estimated interest repayments over 25 years would be £74,282. Repay £5,000 of the mortgage and you will reduce the term of the mortgage to 22 years and 2 months and save a total of £16,351.96.

NASTY HABITS

laying the National Lottery defies reason. Cynics call the lottery a tax on fools, and it's easy to see why. The odds of winning the jackpot are 13.983.816 to one against. Let 70 per cent of the British population regularly buys a lottery ticket.

The lure of the scratchcard is even more insidious. The odds of winning big money are more than six million to one against, but that does not seem to maiter when you are standing in your newsagent's and contemplating the fact that for just £1 extra, you could be walking home with half a pint of milk, a newspaper and £50,000.

The lottery's appeal lies in the sheer quantity of money up for grabs. The biggest prize so far was shared by Paul Madison and Mark Gardiner, who spent one Saturday evening in June 1995 celebrating being £22.5 million richer. Since its launch in November 1994, the National Lot-tery has created 763 British millionaires.

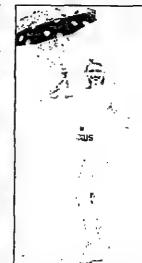

The desire to become the next one leads millions of people to throw as much as £300 a year in Camelot's direction. The average player spends at least £3.33 a week on lottery tickets. If each player also buys at least three instants, the weekly total could be £6.33.

If you stop playing the lot-tery, you could save £329.16 every year. By itself this does not look significant, but it can make a big difference to your savings and investment portfolio.

The average monthly contribution to a unit trust is ESO. Based on performance over the past ten years, and assuming a £50 payment every month over that period, the average UK fund would have grown to about E12,957. This is based on the average performance of UK equity growth, UK growth and UK income funds. If you had invested your £50 in the top-performing fund, Jupiter Income, your investment would now be worth £20,908. If you add to your monthly contribution of just over £25 you would have spent on the lottery, you are even better-off. The average UK fund would have grown to about £20.000 and the Jupiter fund to about £32,000.

Investing your lottery money in your pension fund is also worth consider-ation. According to Virgin Direct. a basic-rate taxpayer who contributes £75 a month to a pension fund from the age of 30 can expect a final fund of about £130,000 by the time he or she reaches 60. If he adds his lottery cash to his pension fund, the final fund be worth almost £50,000 more: £178,000.

Besides the financial benefits, there are many other reasons to give up buying lottery tickets. No more will you live in fear of forgetting to buy your ticket, only to discover that your numbers have come up.

No longer will you have to endure the cloying smiles of the B-list celebrities hired to present the National Lottery Live on TV on Saturday nights. No longer will you contribute voluntarily to the Government's coffers. If you can't resist a bet, choose rationality and stick to horses.

Credit history files on millions of borrowers are stored by the credit reference agencies Experian and Equifax. Some may be held by both. And these play a key part in decisions banks, building societies and other lenders ш on whether to give you a mortgage, loan or credit card.

But not all inquiries come from lenders. Your file, which is divided into categories, includes electoralroll data precious to any organisation that wants to confirm your address and how long you have lived there. Listed in the "court information" category are details of county court judgments and any administration orders (for unpaid parking fines, credit card debts, etc) held against you. This information will not appear if you have note debte tainted for six years. And although you may be virtuous about finances, you may be affected if other family members at the same address are spendthrifts. If so, you can apply for a "notice of dissociation". Another problem is known as "footprints". Every time

your files are searched the organisation's name and the type of inquiry are recorded. Although the lender's decision is not M logged, a string of searches by different lenders may count against you Lenders will not reveal how their credit-scoring systems work, on the ground that we could concoct fraudulent credit applications more easily if we knew. But if you have ever been refused a loan, they must tell you the. main reason for their refusal.

You can also apply for your credit file, which costs £2. Write to: Equifax Plc. Dept IE, PO Box 3001, Glasgow G81 2DT: and Experian, Consumer Help Service, PO Box 8000, Normanan NC:1 5CV

IT IS hard to imagine cookery without the potato. The humble tuber makes so many appearances in so many different forms that Western cuisine would be a poor thing without it. But now an American anthropologist has gone even further.

Cooking tubers, he suggests. was a key event in human evolution, enabling the huge expan-sion of the brain that led to Homo erectus, the human species which first left Africa to colonise the world.

Many explanations have been advanced to explain this dramatic change 1.8 million years ago. with meat-eating a current favourite. But Dr Richard Wrangham, of Harvard University, says that cooked tubers are an even better bet. He points out in Current Anthropology that the Australopithecines, man's ancestors, were eating meat a million years earlier without evolving big brains or larger bodies. Many omnivores alive today have a meat diet, but it has yet to produce any four-legged Einsteins.

So why tubers? They are certainly plentiful in Africa, even if the potato we eat is of South American origin, and suited to a temperate climate, Cassava, yams and sweet potatoes are staples in the Tropics. In Tanzania's savannah grasslands today, there are 40 tonnes of tuber per square kilometre, and no reason to believe things were very different two million years ago, when tuber-eating pigs and mole rats flourished.

Tubers only really show their value when cooked, however. Then the carbohydrates are made palatable and provide a lot of calories. Dr Wrangham calculates, reports Science, that a diet of 60 per cent cooked tubers and no meat boosts calorie intake by more than 40 per cent over a diet of nuts, berries and raw tubers. A 60 per cent meat diet, by contrast, offers only a 20 per cent calorie boost. An energy-rich diet would allow the teeth, jaws and gut to shrink, and the brain to SCIENCE grow — just what happened in the decisive step to man. BRIEFING

The idea of our ancestors eating roots is also more plausible than a meat diet, he believes. Modern hunter-gatherers such as the Hadza of Tanzania may go weeks without a kill, even though they hunt with bows and arrows, tech-nology more advanced than early man.

There is only one flaw with the theory, and it is a fairly big one. There is no evidence of cooking hearths going back further than about 250,000 years, so how did the first human beings cook their tubers? He specu-lates that they discovered the taste when tu-bers were accidentally baked in a grass fire triggered by lightning. But there is little evidence of the systematic use of fire, such as would be expected if baked roots became the nouvelle cuising of the day.

The theory nevertheless has supporters, including anthropologists from the University of Utah in Salt Lake City who argue that these procedures there were here.

fires for cooking tubers might have been ephemeral, leaving few traces. Dr Wrang-ham admits that more evidence is needed. "There hasn't been enough satisfactory archaeology for people to get their teeth into," he says, suiting the metaphor to the subject.

Some autistics, such as the character played by Dustin Hoffman in the film Rain Man, are often highly intelligent but are regarded as socially odd

Enzyme ends the run on reds

PUTTING a bright red sock into a white wash and coming up with everything a sickly pink could soon be just a nasty memory. Scientists from Novo Nordisk Biotech in Davis. California, have developed a tough enzyme that can prevent dye released from one garment attaching itself to another.

They knew that peroxidases could do the job by chewing up dyes in solution, but ordinary ones cannot survive the heat, alkalinity or the hydrogen peroxide concentrations inside a washing machine. They set out to make a better peroxidase by starting with the version made by the ink-cap mushroom, and introducing random changes, both in the amino acid sequence of the enzyme, and into its gene, to create enzymes more resistant to destruction in the wash. They selected the ten most promising, and put their genes into yeast cells. Yeast has the ability to mix and match genes, so this produced thou-sands of mutant combinations.

Further selection and mutation produced a peroxidase 174 times more stable in bot water and 100 times more resistant to hydrogen peroxide than the original, the team reports in Nature Biolechnology. It prevented dyes from a red cloth running into a white one.

Winds of change benefit nightjars

THE winds that demolished the woods of southern England in October 1987 blew in some good for the nightjar, a species that in the early 1980s looked set for extinction in Britain. The 1981 count by the British Trust for Ornithology put the total at no more than 2,100 pairs. But by 1992, to general surprise, the numbers had increased to 3,400.

in Biologist, the journal of the Institute of Biology, Mike Everett, of the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, attributes the turnaround to changes in forestry practice and the great storm of October 1987. Night-jars are heathland birds, but they have turned to clearings in forests as an alternative niche since heath has declined.

In 1981, commercially planted conifers began to be harvested for the first time on a big scale, and nightjars found the areas of clearfell greatly to their liking. The great storm was even better news, and it was followed by a second gale in January 1990. These brought down so many trees that the nightjars were able to use the glades and clear-ings provided to multiply. That this was the cause of the recovery was shown by deliber-ate felling at the RSPB's Minsmere reserve. which had similar effects.

The autistic mind Scientists are using imaging equipment to gain was almost an offence to be autistic. Children were institutionalised and, for many years, parents shouldered the erroneous belief that the condition was the con-sequence of "refrigerator" parenting. Emotional coldness from mothers in particular. psychologists asserted, could explain why their children grew up aloof, unaffectionate and adrift in the world of social relationships. Once psychologists started peering into the minds of those with autism, however, medical thinking was transformed. Autism, which affects about an insight into how the brains of autistic children function. Anjana Ahuja reports one child in 5,000, is now thought to be a mild form of brain damage. Now that scientists can look inside the brain to see how it functions, with the help of imaging equip-ment, the remarkable world inhabited by those with autism is being explored.

Foremost among the navigators is Dr Francesca Happé, senior cognitive psychologist at the Institute of Psychiatry in London. Dr Happé, 31, who will deliver the third lecture in the Scientists for the New Cenaury series, sponsored by The Times and The Royal Institution, prefers to think of autism as a form of "mind-blindness". It is a deficit in the ability to mind-read, which most of us employ subconsciously in everyday life. It allows us to work mind-reading." out why people behave in the way that they do. "For example, take a Smarties tube which contains pencils instead of Smarties," Dr Happe says. children would guess the tube contained Smarties rather than pencils. An autistic child, however, would think that other children Francesca Happe would guess pencils. Because they know the tube contains pencils, they assume other children will automatically know, too." This inability to guess what other people are thinking quickly becomes apparent in children. An autistic toddler will not respond to facial expressions. In extreme cases, there will be no speech or gesture. If there is language it is functional: when autistic children say "apple", it is their

es, but they might act like a human tape recorder, repeating what other people say. o them, language is literal, so they are un-able to tell lies, understand jokes, carroons or figures of speech. The child remains anchored in the physical world, preferring to play with real objects. Most fascinating, perhaps, are children at the so-called high-functioning end of the spectrum — they exhibit mild forms of autism such as Asperger's syndrome. It is these individuals, who are often highly intelligent but are regarded as socially odd, that Dr Happé chose lo concertrate on for her post-doctoral research at the Medical Research Council Cognitive Development Unit, University College London She says: "High-functioning autistics are the kind of people, often men, who memorise the Latin names of every type of carrot and are captivated by train timetables, but are left cold by gossip or EastEnders.

They want friends, but everything they do is socially wrong." The fact that they are ty, suggests that the capacity to empathise with others is housed in a particular area of the brain. This is reinforced by the finding that some patients with brain injuries in the right hemisphere display the symptoms of autism. However, we know that high-functioning autistic children often acquire a glimmer of awareness of what other people are thinking," says Dr Happé. "We found out by accident because parents would tell us that their child had managed to keep a secret or tell a small lie. To do these things, you need to be able to put yourself in someone else's shoes. It led to the idea that people could make their way up the spectrum into the world of

> Did this mean that autistic people could suddenly acquire a natural ability to read minds? Indeed, when presented with scenarios such as the Smarties problem, a few individuals. particularly those competent at language, could perform well. However, not all their

appeared. Dr Happe discovered that even though high-functioning autistics could pass the Smarties test, they would fall down at more sophisticated scenarios. "One story involved a conversation between someone who wanted to buy a kitten and a cat-lover selling them," she says. "When the buyer hesitated, the seller said 'If no one buys them, I'll drown them." The participants generally knew the seller wouldn't drown the kittens, but didn't know why. They couldn't see that it was a ruse to get a sale." Her research has had practical, as well as academic, impact. Similar tests are used to the subject. By scanning the brains of autistics and non-autistics while they studied stories, she discovered that the groups process the information using slightly different parts of the brain. So even though they appear to read social signals, they read them in a different way.

disorder, people with autism suddenly being switched on, it is as if the people with autism are using all their intelligence to work out what is going on. That's why autistics don't watch EastEnders — while we find it easy to understand the social intrigue, it's hard work for them." Her next task is to scan the brains of normal and their brains deal with mindreading as they grow up.

Dr Happe thinks that as we come to know more about the

They often have exceptional memories, and are predictable and logical, which makes them adept at interacting with computers. In fact, the coming century is going to be a good time for people with autism."

Why do some people find cartoons and soap operas as challenging as mental arithmetic? On Wednesday April 28, in How the Brain reads the Mind, Dr Francesca Happé from the Institute of Psychiatry will discuss how autism has come to be regarded as a form of "mind-blindness." She will also show how our brains allow us to guess what others are thinking.

The lecture will be chaired by Professor Susan Greenfield, Director of The Royal Institution. Members of the audience will also be able to ask questions.

The lecture will be held at 7.30pm at The Royal Institution of Great Britain, 21 Albemarie Street, London W1X 4BS.

Major booty at the Manhattan baby shower

Sunday: "Hi, presents go in would be tempting fate. But the corner," orders Betsy, our hostess, leading us through to her crowded Madison Avenue sitting room and pointing to a Himalayan-like pile of boxes where the contempo-rary icons of serious consumerism are well represented. I spot the distinctive turquoise of Tiffany's, several grey boxes from Saks, a couple of black and silver Barneys bags and the blue and purple logo of Fifth Avenue's smartest department store, Bergdorf

Wow, that's some major booty going on," observes a rangy, blonde editor in a black Raiph Lauren pantsuit, who pours me a glass of cranberry juice. I place my own offering at the bottom of the teetering mountain, for what is becoming a regular feature of my Sunday afternoons: The Manhattan Baby Shower.

In London, my pregnant friends were far too supersti-tious to want presents before the baby was born. With typical British gloom, they felt that asking for Bunnykins mugs or a set of Beatrix Potter

Americans embrace the future differently. And among Manhattan's Manhattan's professional women the baby shower, once mocked as a relic of the homemaker Fifties, is now back as a serious social event.

Today's crowd consists mainly of thirtysomething writers, executives and shrinks, and even though it's Sunday we are all dressed alike - in the black-suited uniform of the working woman. This is like a really great book launch, except there are no men," says Dani, this afternoon's guest of honour, who is a writer and university teacher. As is the convention, her baby is due in a month's time. Her husband has gone drinking with his father and will make his appearance, to thank us for showering his wife with gifts, at precisely guests are expected to mingle, sipping tea and nibbling cookies. This afternoon's fare, pre-pared by the host's husband (the only man allowed on the premises and still labouring in the kitchen) is a delicious assortment of female finger food. Amid jugs of exploding red tulips there are platters of cucumber slices layered with Gruyère and tomato, endîve boats loaded with Roquefort,

As is customary, one guest is appointed to select the order of gifts while another, armed with pen and paper, keeps track of who gave what A formal thank-you note is expected.

First up is a black and yellow box tied with a hig yellow ribbon. Dani undoes the parcel, sifting through the layers of tissue paper until she pulls out a tiny black jacket and matching black trousers. She holds it up and the entire room of women, tough TV pro-ducers, ad executives and investigative reporters, burst out in unison: "Aaahhh!"

"It's beautiful," exclaims Dani, placing the suit back in the box and handing it round for each of us to inspect. The next gift is a Harrods teddy bear from London which she holds aloft, "Azahhh!" we all approval. Musical mobiles, a baby gym, cuddly toys, a silver rattle, two miniature denim jackets, baby cosmetics and dozens of brightly coloured onesies are piled on top of each other. But behind the Manhattan baby shower there can be serious social tension because it straddles that masource of female angst - single-hood. Much more than weddings, the baby shower here marks the graduation of a woman from the collegiate sorority of girlfriends into the world of motherhood. And it is sometimes tinged with the wistfulness of a farewell party. For the unspoken realisation is that the intensity of probably be lost for ever.

It is particularly tricky for those who do not breed - a very substantial tribe of Manhattan females. I know, from having waited relatively late

It is probably a function of rarity, in the same way that the elderly are venerated in the Third World where so few survive into old age. But Manhattan is the high temple of kiddie tyranny and the high riests and priestesses are the baby-boomers, the first generation to be brought up within the twin comforting arms of disposable income and consumer choice. autumn, the 1994 Macedonian election was one of the most corrupt foreign observers had ever seen. Real political power, in any case, rests with the pro-Serb. Communist-dominated Ministry of the Interior.

The original state and its borders were a child of Stalinto the Macedonian Question that bedevilled the late Ottoman Europe. Under Tito, the socialist republic of Macedonia was a garden suburb of Serbia, used for cheap holidays, wine and food, the bottom of the Yugoslav heap in every way. A pro-Belgrade Skopie elite was built up, a motiev collection of hardline Communists who were really Serbs thinly disguised as "Macedonians". They justified their hegemony through a manufactured history which was closer to mythology. But as long as all was peace and quiet, it didn't seem to matter

Beneath the surface, however, there is a very dark side to Macedonia. A side stained by Serb influence, and tainted by criminal money. The elite made millions by breaking United Nations sanctions against Serbia. In 1994 I remember sitting at the border checkpoint at night — the same place where the refugees are now suffering — watching convoys of fuel waved through and speeding towards Macedonia that we have witnessed this week, in its contemptuous treatment of the refugees. But despite the protestations, there is no good reason why most Kosovan refugees cannot stay in Macedonia. The west, where most Albanians live, is fertile and not overpopulated. Massive short-term help is needed, but that is all. The last thing that most refugees want is to be torn from a potentially supportive rural Islamic environment and relocated in some bleak hostel in Stockholm or Dagenham. The fuss about the tide of refugees is almost entirely political; if they remain for any length of time in Macedonia, they will not destabilise the state, only the privileged bosses with their old nomenklapura connections.

As the entire state is essentially financed by the IMF, the power exists to force through rapid change. The Government has made some genuinely helpful gestures to improve ethnic relations, such as the release of all political prisoners from jall.

but much more needs to be done. Higher education in the Albanian language needs full legitimisation and public spending must be fairly directed to minority areas.

The Macedonian and Greek Governments must be put under must be put under more pressure to resolve the name of the state, a long-running sore that prevents normal ties between Skopje and its natural economic partners in Salonika and prosperous, EU-orientated northern Greece. Turkey must be stopped from playing cheap politics with Skopje over national issues to irritate Athens.

But events are moving very fast, and some of these and other human rights reforms may be too late to prevent chaos and fragmentation. Nato should prepare plans for a de facto protectorate, as all previous history of the Macedonian Question shows that a crisis in Macedonia has been the catalyst for a much wider Balkan war. It is an unpleasant reality that should be faced if the darkness is not to spread over the whole southern Balkan region.

Patriots for peace

oltaire would have found life difficult in today's Labour Party. Where is the space for principled dissent? Scotland's election campaign opened yesterday, and even before it began it had been marred by unattractive intolerance, and not from the Nationalists. Alex Salmond's entirely principled opposition to Nato's bombing of Serbia, which he claims has strengthened President Milosevic and worsened the plight of the Kosovan Albanians, drew a cheap, sneering response from Robin Cook. The SNP leader's criticisms of the offensive against Serbia, or at least the present airstrikes, have made him "the toast of Belgrade", says the Foreign Secretary, and "simply unfit to lead" in Scotland because he was "standing shoulder to shoulder with Milosevic".

A glance at the history books would show Mr Cook that, far from making them until to lead, opposing wars has afforded British politicians a fast track into office.

When the Tory press misrepre-

When the Tory press misrepresented the Labour leader Ramsay MacDonald's principled stand against the Great War as pro-German, it was rightly condemned in Labour circles as an unwarranted slur on his patriotism. Now that new Labour tries the same trick, we are told it is within the bounds of legitimate political discourse.

But the career of MacDonald should cause Mr Cook to reflect. Denounced as a traitor and pacifist in 1914 when he was neither. MacDonald became, for a time, the most unpopular man in Britain. He lost his West Leicester seat in the December 1918 election by 14,000 votes. Yet only six years later he was Prime Minister, borne to power by an electorate that by 1924 largely agreed with his assertion that the war had "put back the clock of civilisation a century in four years".

The Prime Minister during that war had been David Lloyd George, also no pacifist, who had virulently opposed the Boer War only 14 years before. Like Mr Salmond today, he believed Britain was committing an "unpardonable folly" fighting an aggressive war of "dubious legality". Both men said that while British servicemen deserved support, the politicians who deployed them deserved only criticism.

For his stand, Lloyd George was burnt in effigy in Criccieth, bludgeoned at Bangor, and escaped from a riot in Birmingham, in which two Labour is wrong to denounce critics of this conflict. Dissent is people died, only by dressing up as a policeman. "The man who tries to make the flag an object of a single party is a greater traitor to that flag than any man who fires at it," said Lloyd George, in words that Mr. Saimond could refterate with profit against Mr Cook. As the sheen of imperialism faded with the knowledge of the methods by which the Boer War was finally won, Lloyd George's career was boosted.

Britain has a long and honour-

Britain has a long and honourable tradition of brave politicians opposing wars they consider wrongful, and their stands have rarely harmed them in the long run. William Pitt the Elder denounced the American War of me American War of Independence and the Prime Minister, Lord North, offered to resign in his favour once he was proved right. Lord Salisbury opposed the Crimean War, and it only enhanced his reputation for independent thought and action. Charles James Fox even opposed the Napoleonic Wars in 1803, but it did not prevent him from becoming Foreign Secretary three years later. For Mr

augurs well for his future. Unlike the Second World War or the Falklands conflict, where the issues were clear-cut and the objectors few and generally extremist. Nato's first aggressive war in half a century has raised understandable doubts in the minds of many Britons who would normally support the organisation. Despite the engagement of British servicemen abroad, it is not unpatriotic, as Mr Cook would have us believe, to question the nature of this war, and in particular his own department's blithe disregard for the all-important Law of Unintended Consequences. For all that we are told by Nato's Jamie Shea that the "surgical operations" have been a success, it is impossible not to notice that the patient has inconveniently died.

Perhaps the supporters of Nato.

people who cheered its bloodless

victory over the Warsaw Pact and admired its half-century of Western solidarity, were always being oversanguine. They were hoping that for once in history a genuinely defensive alliance would not succumb to the fatal temptation of enlargement and self-aggrandisement. Here, they believed, was an organisation that was not so arrogant as to rewrite its uniquely successful founding charter. Instead, predictably enough, it ripped up the pledge not to expand itself 300 miles eastwards, given verbally to Mikhail Gorbachev at the time Russia allowed the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Instead of acting cautiously and modestly, in accord with its development since April 1949. Nato has acted hegemonically, thereby inflaming Russian nationalism at precisely the time that it can do most danger. It has acted in the same way that every overmighty political entity has done since Nineveh and Tyre with, one day doubtless, the same doomed result. Despite their enormous individual contri-

and administration of the British Empire, the Scottish are not quite so collectively jingoistic as the rest of the United Kingdom. It was no accident, as Roy Jenkins stated in his biography of Gladstone, that the constituency of Midlothian was chosen for the Liberal leader to deliver his philippics against Disraeli's "Forward" policies, which had led to much bloodshed in Zululand and Afghanistan. "It was a story that was to repeat itself in minor key," adds Jenkins, "just over a hundred years later when Scotland was noticeably cool on the Falklands war." It was cooler still over the Gulf War.

If Mr Salmond is accurately articulating what the opinions of his people might be in a few years' time about this latest adventure, sharing an opinion of the war that stretches across the political kaleidoscope from Tony Benn's Radicals to Alan Clark's High Tories, then Mr

Cook's smears will prove as myopic as they are historically illiterate. For nowhere in Labour's 1997 manifesto was a mandate requested so to alter the nature of Nato as to unleash a war on a state which posed no threat to any Nato member.

There might have been a case to make for an all-out ground war liberation of Kosovo, or for arming the Kosovan Liberation Army to fight the West's battle as the Mujahidin did in Afghanistan in the 1980s, or even for telling the Kosovan Albanians to try to make the best of their oppression as it was beyond Nato's remit to interfere in the internal affairs of sovereign states. Yet there is no case to be made for the present embarrassed, lukewarm and hugely counter-productive policy, and Mr Salmond is not "standing shoulder to shoulder" with Mr Milosevic for saying so.

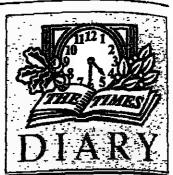

he historian A.J.P. Taylor used to say that the two World Wars were essentially fought between the British House of Commons and the continued unabated throughout the two wars in Britain: indeed both Herbert Asquith and Neville Chamberlain, who led the nation into the conflicts, were removed by the political process during them. The fact that free, informed debate carries on during the wars which Britain fights enormously strengthens her sense of moral superiority. This can be a tangible wartime asset. As Richard Overy's seminal book on the Second World War, Why the Allies Won, puts it: "Whatever the rights and wrongs of the Allied cause, the belief that they fought on the side of righteousness equipped them with a powerful moral armament", which translated itself into better morale.

No greater manifestation of a country's commitment to the great liberal values can be imagined than openly disputing the merits of a war while it is still being fought. As John Simpson reports from Belgrade, it is not happening there, any more than it does in any authoritarian regime. By resorting to gross misrepresentation and name-calling, the Government risks stopping such valuable criticism happening here too.

The author's biography of Lord Salisbury will be published in September.

THE FINAL TEST

Monetary union should not be the gateway to political union

FOR EUROPE

() At a time when Europe's capacity for unity and international leadership has been so tragically questioned in the Balkans, it may seem troubling to discuss the issue of whether the single currency will create a political federation in Europe. Yet the human catastrophe in the former Yugoslavia should act as a reminder of the dangers of imposing artificial political templates on of imposing a tribular in the interests which constitutes political tribular in the interests which constitutes political tribular in Europe. When tical reality in Europe. When the interpretation in Tony Blair announced his Government's decision to try to persuade the British public to persuade the British public to in monetary union, The Times suggested five tests that during the project should meet before in his Government could consider hild by calling a referendum. The fifth and most in the fundamental of these related to the political implications of monetary union. Despite Mr Blair's breezy assurance that the hank there is no overriding constitutional objection" to monetary union, this fear of a march towards political unification remains the most important reason for "Feler popular hesitation about the single curren-

" the cy in Britain. The Prime Minister insists

"Phay, that fears about a drive towards deeper political integration are either irrelevant or history i vastly exaggerated. But most of the political leaders in EMU countries hold the opposite view. It may be, of course, that Mr Blair is right and continental politicians and central bankers are mistaken. Before Britain even contemplates joining EMU, there needs to be strong evidence that Mr Blair's view about the nature of monetary union is going to prevail.

The first test of the political implications of EMU relates simply to the ideological dynamics of Europe. Before the Prime Minister can even hope to be believed on the political innocuousness of EMU, there will have to be an end to the rhetoric from Brussels, Berlin, Paris and Rome about the political "deepening" of Europe. At present many European leaders continue to advocate curtailing national vetoes. Mr Blair can argue that all this is mere rhetoric, but as long as the leaders of Europe continue to be driven by federalist aspirations, it will be logical to conclude that they will use EMU to drive forward this project.

This is particularly true because of the second implication of monetary union. The single currency, by its very existence, will create economic forces which could encourage deeper political integration. By eliminating currency adjustments, EMU will focus attention on the competitive implications of divergent wage levels, tax structures and social security arrangements across Europe. As a result Germany and other high tax, high wage countries may try to impose their high costs on the rest of Europe by campaigning for majority voting on taxes and for restrictions on working conditions and "social dumping".

A third source of pressure for political co-ordination may arise from the EMU stability pact and the impact of future economic crises on different European countries. In the United States, when Texas falls into recession, its citizens pay less tax to Washington and receive more social benefits, while those of booming states pay proportionately more and receive less. This creates an automatic, but strictly temporary, redistribution mechanism that tends to reduce the impact of regional booms and busts. In Europe, no such mechanisms exist. While economists will argue about the theories behind this issue, the reality will be tested as soon as a part of Europe is hit by economic crisis. Britain must see firm evidence that pressures for a bigger federal budget do not, in practice, intensify.

A fourth source of political problems arises from the institutions created by EMU. The stability pact imposes limits on public borrowing by EMU countries. If the European Central Bank involves itself in Europe's fiscal debates, as the Bundesbank did in Germany, the pressures will mount for European finance mininsters to co-ordinate their fiscal policies and speak with one voice. EMU is also creating a culture of unanimity for members of the Euro-II in their international dealings, with the G7, the IMF and the US. If such pressures for European unity keep mounting, they will present a final, decisive, argument against Britain joining EMU. Britain would suffer an irreversible erosion of its limited, but distinctive, influence on the world stage.

SERBS BEARING GIFTS

A cynical ceasefire offer that Nato has rightly dismissed

Nato's military commanders and political envy. President Milosevic is well aware of "" initiative from Serbia in advance of the Orthodox Easter weekend. They had also given warning in advance that "hollow half-measures" would not be allowed to stop the bombing. However, even the most hardened observer of Balkan politics could not have been prepared for the extraordinary performance by Vuk Draskovic, the Yugoslav Deputy Prime Minister, in televised appearances yesterday. Mr Draskovic calmly announced the predicted temporary ceasefire with all due flourish but added that the one million or more Kosovan Albanian refugees were welcome to return to their homeland. This proclamation is unlikely to be received with rapture on the Macedonian border. Even if Kosovan Albanians were inclined to forget the events of the recent past and place their faith in the words of the Serbian authorities, they have ashes not houses to return to. This is such an utterly shameless diplomatic "offer" that Saddam Hussein must have felt a sense of serious negotiations to be reopened. He continues to show little interest in them.

If Mr Milosevic shows the slightest sign of slowing his onslaught on the Kosovans this week, it will be because he feels that he has already succeeded in meeting his objectives. The terror sown over the past two weeks may well have been enough by itself to persuade every single Kosovo Albanian to head towards the border. The only realistic prospect of their ever heading home will come if Nato's bombing alters the balance of power in Belgrade.

There is one aspect of the Draskovic statement that should be taken seriously. The Serbian leadership might be inclined to conclude an "internal settlement" with those members of the Kosovan political class whom it holds captive. A deal of this form would be no more acceptable than the latest nominal "ceasefire". Mr Milosevic's main aim over the next few days will be to spread division among the Nato nations, not to reconcile Kosovo with Serbia.

CHALK AND CHEESE

Blunkett should be supported on performance-related pay

David Blunkett's proposals on teaching salaries are, according to Doug McAvoy, the general secretary of the National Union of Teachers, speaking yesterday, a "tyranny" that represents the "greatest challenge" to the NUT in a century and upon which rests "the future of the education service in England and Wales". The policies pursued by the Prime Minister, he declared, were simply "disaster, disaster, disaster" for the teaching profession. The same blueprint was stoutly defended by Estelle Morris, the Schools Minister, who told a sceptical audience at the conference of the National Association of Schoolmasters and Union of Women Teachers that she was prepared to be "flexible" and that for the first 12 months the new scheme would be "voluntary".

This rhetoric might lead an innocent observer to conclude that Tony Blair and Mr Blunkett are setting out to siash dassroom salaries. The truth is that the Government plans to spend an extra El billion on pay over the next two years but intends to direct these additional resources towards the most talented teachers. An aspect, but not the only element, of this package involves whether an individual teacher's efforts translate into improving results for pupils. This is the "outrage" that led to Mr Blunkett's heckling by the NUT on Saturday and Mr McAvoy's outburst.

The NUT now plans to call for a ballot on a one-day strike as part of its campaign of industrial activity. The teaching unions believe that Mr Blunkett can be forced into diluting his ideas beyond recognition. The Secretary of State should not buckle at this blackmail. The Government has offered enough concessions on this issue already. These proposals represent the means by - which teaching salaries can be increased in a fashion that will not divert resources from the central task of raising standards.

The NUT executive would, it seems, prefer equality of poverty to differential affluence. It argues that either the task of evaluating merit among teachers is impossible or that to do so would be enormously divisive. Mr McAvoy has claimed that it would be invidious to make distinctions among those who are performing the same basic functions. On this logic, the salaries bill at Manchester United and Macclesfield Town should be identical.

Teachers rightly aspire for their occupation to be recognised as a "profession". One of the most elementary features of a profession is that of individual contracts, not collective bargaining. Performance-related pay may well be rotten news for full-time union officials. It is, however, a real opportunity for ordinary teachers. Mr McAvoy's opposition is not, however. very surprising. The most astonishing aspect of this whole saga is that David Willetts, the Shadow Education Secretary. seems to be supporting the unions. Mr Willetts has condemned strike threats but believes Mr Blunkett would be "making a serious mistake if he presses ahead with a scheme which the whole profession considers unworkable". Conservative ministers. correctly, never permitted the NUT a de facto veto on policy when they held office. The Tories should be pushing Mr Blunkett to go faster and further in the direction that he is taking. Mr Willetts will be making a serious mistake if he presses ahead with a position that the vast majority of voters. including almost all Conservative sympathisers, will consider utterly incredible.

KLA resistance to Serb 'brutality'

From Professor Geoffrey Lee Williams

Sir, Can I suggest, if Nato is unable to deploy ground forces to Kosovo in support of its air operations, that there is an alternative strategy which is worth contemplating. This is to give fully-fledged support to the Kosovo Liberation Army (KLA), whose insurgency now stands to benefit from the diminution of Serb strength on the ground arising from Nato's air attacks. The congenital weakness of the KLA could now be reversed by enabling it to exploit four features of the strategic situation which are likely to develop as spring passes into

1. The existence of a greatly weak-ened adversary on the ground in

2. The existence of a unifying cause arising from the brutalisation of the ethnic Albanian population by the Serbs which could encourage fierce resistance to oppression and ex-

3. Favourable geographical features which can be exploited in guerrilla

4. The existence of outside support from the world's best armed military

Clearly, the KLA's strategic aims would be full independence for Kosovo but with entrenched rights for the Serb population, guaranteed by the presence of a Nato peace-enforced contingent, similar to those now deployed in Bosnia under the rubric of an international peace agreement.

Sir, Clare Short, a British minister, is presumably a guest in Macedonia (today's front page). Therefore she should not be publicly urging its government officials to disobey instructions.

This is particularly offensive when they are struggling to cope with a refugee problem greatly aggravated by British government actions.

From Professor Emeritus Philip S. James

Sir, is it not folly for a pot to call a kettle black? Is it not a war crime for us and our bomb-happy Allies to endanger the lives of our gallant servicemen by raining down death and destruction upon open cities?

One can only reflect that an untutored generation can hardly be expected to recall the twin lessons of the 19th century that a nation's internal affairs are its own and that punitive expeditions have usually done more harm than good. Permit me, Sir, to prophesy that, faced as we now appear to be with a consensus of informed opinion against this ominously dangerous piece of folly. Mr Blair would do well to execute one of his customary political retreats.

From Sir Dick Pantlin

Sir, Mr James Wilde (letter, March 27) describes the Foreign Secretary's move to restore full British citizenship to the islanders of Tristan da Cunha as "a just, if belated, restoration of their rightful status"

It is to be hoped that the Foreign Secretary will correct a further unjustifiable omission by ensuring that second-generation children of British citizens born in continental EU countries do not automatically lose their right to pass on British nationality, no doubt in the belief that they will have "gone native". It is of great importance to Britain that more and more families decide to set up homes and create businesses in continental Europe. Their children and grandchildren will learn foreign languages and be used to working in a foreign culture, thus becoming ideal candidates later to work in the UK or abroad for British interests. These restrictions do not apply to those "in Crown service", yet families in busi-ness and other professions are treated differently, which is absurd.

This matter could be solved by but a tiny alteration to the same Act ("birth in these States being equivalent to birth in the UK'), could not take more than a few minutes of parliamentary time, cannot possibly meet with political opposition, is within the spirit of EU legislation which encourages mobility of labour, and would avoid condemning a child - who might well wish in due course to return to Britain - to a future linked to the actions of his or her parents and grandparents.

sons involved in the next few years would equal the present population of the Pitcairn Islands, but an important step will have been taken to encourage the greater involvement of British families in continental Europe. This will be necessary whatever may be the precise future nature of Britain's links with that area.

Yours sincerely DICK PANTLIN Il Avenue de Mercure, Brussels B.1180.

From Mr Piers Litherland

Sir, I know of no ancestor of mine born outside Britain. And yet, under the terms of current British nationality legislation, I am unable to pass on my inherited British nationality to my children because I happened to be born outside Britain in the then British territory of Rhodesia

I am only British "by descent". In this respect. I am less British than any child born in Britain - even a child born to a refugee, illegal immigrant or tourist with no previous connection of any sort with this country.

In the one case an accident of birth conveys full British citizenship, in my own it denies it. Can this be right?

I remain yours etc PIERS LITHERLAND, Flat 3, 10a/b Stanley Beach Road, Stanley, Hong Kong.

Speed traps

From Mr T. Keith Taylor

Sir, Mr R. J. Butler (letter, March 31) criticises the publication of details of speed-control measures. Surely the use of cameras and the like is to reduce traffic speeds to the legal level and not primarily to entrap motorists.

Sincerely T. KEITH TAYLOR, Acers, 11 Green Oak Road, Watton, Norfolk 1P25 6BE. April 3.

From Mr A. G. E. White

Sir, Recently browsing the microfiche of The Times for August 1914 for Open University work, I was surprised to note, in passing, two editorial features advising motorists of the positioning of speed traps. I did not see any adverse comment from the police.

Have we become too subservient?

Yours humbly, ARCHIE WHITE, 11 Tynedale Court,

Kirk Sandall, Doncaster DN3 IRN.

From Mr Chris Ogilvie-Taylor

Sir, Any sympathy that I had for our manufacturing industry in decline has fast evaporated following my recent experience of trying to place business, on behalf of a large retailer, with a UK manufacturer of printed fabrics, rather than the usual Far East source of supply.

My brief was for fabric finished as a fashion accessory, which required a certain amount of handworking. Everyone I spoke to could print the fabric but didn't want to do the finishing: so they suggested a competitor!

Not one company out of the 12 that I called had the gumption to ask for more details, take my name, or say they'd look into it and get back to me. I got the impression that it all sounded too much trouble to them, and as it didn't fit exactly with what they'd been doing for the last 20 years, they'd be best to let it pass.

With such a large order at stake, we've returned to sourcing from outside the UK but this experience leaves me bemused and exasperated. I'm quite sure that those dozen companies badly need new business but they wouldn't adapt themselves to my

The only way for our manufacturing industry to survive is to ask customers what they want and respond to those needs and opportunities, not just distribute what they've

Arm-twisting software From Mrs Kate Perera

Sir, I have been accustomed for many years now to using word-processing software for the production of reports, letters and other pieces of writing. Each time I update my software, while fascinated by the new possibilities offered in terms of layout and appearance, I become further irritated by other people's attempts to dictate my writing style, spelling and grammar.

any sentence over three lines long, no matter how clear its subject, construction and punctuation; my grammar is unnecessarily questioned; I am obliged to use bullet-points when none is required; and I suffer from software which asks if I want its help when it notices that I am writing a letter.

Obviously I can, and do, switch off these minor nuisances. What concerns me, however, is that their default setting is "on", ie, they start from a basic assumption of ignorance and incapability. When at the same time newspapers produce whole supplements lamenting the decline of educational standards, I cannot help wondering whether my computer software is symptomatic, and whether we are simply not asking young people to think or do enough for themselves. I do not believe that the correct solution is to provide automatic correction without first stimulating the individual to both make and learn from his or her own mistakes.

Business plan for single currency

From Mr Giles Radice, MP for Durham North (Conservative), and Mr Bill Rammell, MP for Harlow

Sir, MORI, Gallup, NOP, Eurofile, City Research and others have consistently shown that British business is behind the single currency. The poll published yesterday by Business for Sterling (report, March 31) has, in our view, been designed around leading questions and false logic.

With 86 per cent of those surveyed having heard "little" or "nearly nothing" about the implications of the single currency, it is no surprise that the base of British euroscepticism is rooted in confusion and misinformation. This problem is most marked among smaller businesses, which are the least informed and the most eurosceptic. Perhaps Business for Sterling should focus more on why these two factors are so frequently related. Interestingly, it remains silent about its finding that 56 per cent of businesses say Britain will end up losing out while other countries in the eurozone benefit. Similarly, it hasn't mentioned the 51 per cent of busi-nesses who agree that our future is in Europe and that we have to go in wholeheartedly. Businesses across Britain need to plan for the single currency as a reality. Whilst Business for Sterling might want to put its head in the ground, real businesses need to be informed and prepared for the single currency. This is the real issue for business.

Yours sincerely, GILES RADICE. Chairman, European Movement, BILL RAMMELL. Chairman, Labour Movement for Europe, House of Commons. April I.

Sir. The Director of the National Portrait Gallery, Mr Charles Saumarez Smith (letter, April 2), points out the failure of compulsory admission charges to the national museums and galleries imposed by the Heath Government and the disastrous drop in visitor numbers to this institution

In 1970, when the Wilson Government was in power, the Treasury decreed that entrance charges should be levied to visit the Annigoni portrait of the Queen at the National Portrait Gallery.

However, the Treasury was outflanked by Jennie Lee (then Minister for the Arts), who told it that the donor (myself) would offer to hang the portrait in "Harrods stores" if the then owners would agree.

I asked Miss Lee the Treasury's reply. It was simply, "Yes, Minister". Yours faithfully, HUGH LEGGATT

Academy plans £14m 'living museum' of music

Historic instruments will be seen and played

By Dalya Alberge

ARTS CORRESPONDENT

THE Royal Academy of Music, which has one of the world's finest collections of historic instruments, is planning to revolutionise the way these are displayed - with a £14 million "living museum". which will open next year in a building beside the academy. The traditional museum approach, with instruments propped up forlornly in glass cases, will be scrapped so that the public can see and hear the finest examples being played, while observing and talking to master craftsmen as they make new ones. Curtis Price, Principal of the academy, one of the world's premier conserva-toires, said: "This will be a new concept in museums. It will be the only place in the world where members of the public can come in off the street and see great Strad instruments on display and hear them being played. There will be informal con-certs, lectures and work-He is dismayed that instru-ments at the Victoria and Albert Museum in London or the Musée de la Musique in Paris are never played. In Paris, "they are locked away behind armoured glass, half an inch thick, and never touched - except by curators. That makes me weep. If you see an instrument, you want to know what it sounds like."

Never allowing anyone to play them is madness, he said. While accepting that some instruments are extremely fragile, be disagrees with museum curators who believe that every time an instrument is played, original evidence is lost. They deteriorate if they

Ben Weinreb, antiquarian bookseller. dled on April 3 aged 87. He was born on February 5, 1912.

n June 1956 a short, somewhat rotund, bearded man carrying a large Gladstone bag hurried into the office of the librarian of the Royal Institute of British Architects. It was Ben Weinreb, and in his bag were John Smart Mill's Autobiography. the 1589 Barbaro Perspettiva. Rushs's Seats in Essex, a couple of first editions of T. S. Eliot's poems and a roll of papers which turned out to be Hawksmoor's drawings for one of the Evelyn family's houses and an exquisite design by Robert Adam for a chimneypiece.

Weinreb had been selling books for some time, and now, with the decline of the great architectural publishers and booksellers Batsford's (once a great rendezvous) and Tiranti, he sensed his opportunity. He was soon to outdo every was soon to outdo every field of architectural books. drawings, manuscripts and

Benjamin born in Halifax. His mother born in Halifax. His mother his birth, and died soon after his birth, and since his father was interned during the First World War as an enemy alien, he spent his early years at a nurses' training college before his father's second wife took him to live with her in a weaver's cottage. It was to her that he owed many of the tastes and instincts that brought him success. When the family moved to London, he was sent to Whitgift School, but he performed so spectacularly badly that the headmaster said that it was extremely unlikely that he would succeed in life. His first job was in the theology department at Foyle's. but he was soon sacked for being late, and over the next few years eked out a living as an intermittent scriptwriter for documentary films, as an assistant stage carpenter, and by making sandals for the Regent's Park Theatre. Yet he was irresistibly drawn to books and increasingly supplemented his income as a book-runner, buying cheaply where he could and selling to established dealers.

In 1935 he took a job minding the bookshop devoted to poetry and left-wing politics at No 4 Parton Street (where he shared the attic floor with Dylan Thomas). He always had a leaning towards architec-ture, perhaps because he liked buildings and streetscapes, and perhaps also because he was dyslexic but responsive to splendid engravings. Slowly he acquired a stock of books on the subject, and in 1952 he began to make the change from book-runner to dealer, setting up a small storeroom in New Oxford Street.

John Betjeman became his first regular customer, though as Weinreb wrote, he 'left behind far more than he took away, for, stimulated by the

of notes on his stock, Weinreb issued the first of 60 remarkable catalogues, which set a new standard of scholarly description and which remain an envied model.

Shortly afterwards he moved to a three-storey building at 39 Great Russell Street, where the business took off in

Although the timing was propitious, Weinreb was also fortunate to be succoured by two major collectors who boosted his rise to success: Paul Mellon (through his librarian, Willis Van Devanter) and Phyllis Lambert, who was determined to form one of the greatest architectural libraries in the world: her Canadian Centre for Architecture in Montreal. In 1968 Weinreb achieved the legendary feat of selling his entire stock to Texas

University, after which he bought the huge corner building at 93 Great Russell Street and rapidly filled it up with ever more books. It had at least a dozen rooms and so many basement stores that even he lost track of some of them. The shop sold books from the cheapest to the most expensive, and there were also periodicals galore and boxes and drawers of drawings.

Dealers, collectors, librari-ans and historians came to browse and to buy, and to scoff his delicious sandwiches, quaff his good wine and — endlessly — to talk. Among the customers were Anthony Blunt, Claus von Bülow, Mark Millard, Phyllis Lambert and James Stirling (who was heard to complain that he never had an opportunity to look at books. because Weinreb always buttonholed him to discuss the latest trends in architecture). Weinreb's expertise enabled him to spot many "sleepers" in the auction rooms. Most notably, in 1978, he identified the importance of a book estimated at £20-£40 in Sotheby's Signet library sale, and spent £10,500 on commission to acquire a very rare second edition of Ledoux's Architecture (1847).

By 1982, when he turned 70. Weinreb was so prominent in the world of architectural history that his birthday party was held at the Architectural Association, with Sir John Summerson giving the address. Weinreb's business was finally sold to Sotheran's in 1986 for well over £1 million. He contributed a series of articles to The Times on all aspeas of books and book collecting during the late 1970s and early 1980s, and took great pleasure in contributing to his son Matthew's photographic study London Architecture: Features and Facades. But the work for which he is best known is The London Encyclopaedia, which after many years' work reached fruition in 1983 with the help of Christopher Hibbert, and which remains in

Although he never considered himself a scholar-bookseller, Weinreb recognised the value of scholarly advice and often turned to architectural historians such as Howard Colvin in Oxford, Robin Mid-dleton in Cambridge, and John Harris at the RIBA. His office became a nursery for a group of young bibliographers and bookmen, without whom he could never have produced his magisterial sequence of catalogues. Through that group of friends and employees, many of whom are now themselves leading antiquarian bookdealers, his high standards and precepts have benefited the whole of the trade.

Ben Weinreb married Kay Lazarus in 1939, but the marriage was later dissolved. after which he married Joan Kingdon-Rowe in 1957. He is survived by a daughter from his first marriage and a son and a daughter from his

DR PATRICK MOUNSEY

Dr Patrick Mounse Provost of the Welsh National School of Medicine, 1969-79, died on February 21 aged 85. He was born on February I, 1914.

BEFORE Patrick Mounsey became a medical administrator. he was what is known as "a doctors' doctor", for his colleagues sought his opinion for themselves as well as for their patients. Courteous and softspoken, he always gave a well-thought-out judgment based as much on an understanding of human nature as on a sound knowledge of medicine. As a doctor he strove for standards which were so high as to be disconcerting, but his demands were usually soliened with a dry but humorous comment, and he endeared himself to his staff by his loyalty and generosity.

He had a slightly unusual upbringing, as his parents were great friends and constant companions of the Chris-ties of Glyndebourne. He played in the orchestra at Glyndebourne when still only 14; the association helped to inspire his lifelong interest in

John Patrick David Mounsey was educated at Eton, where he was Captain of the Oppidans: for the rest of his life he was always proud of being the first head of a house to introduce compulsory baths. After Eton he read classics at King's College, Cambridge, where he developed a keen interest in linguistics. He was an above-average artist and draughtsman and after Cambridge began training as an architect. However, on a visit to Paris he sat for too long on a sun-drenched balcony and developed severe heatstroke with cerebral complications. When he recovered he abandoned the idea of architecture, determined to become a doctor, and studied medicine at King's College Hospital, London,

LUCILLE LORTEL

Lucille Lortel, theatrical producer, died in New York on April 4 aged 98. She was born on December 16, 1900.

TWO unrelated things earned Lucille Lortel the epithet "the Queen of Off-Broadway": a traditional husband and a shortage of oats. Her husband put a stop to her budding acting career when he demanded that she stay at home in the evenings. But the bored dutiful wife reinvented herself as a producer when a grain shortage on her country estate allowed her to convert the barn into a theatre.

Over the next fifty years, she helped some of the greatest names in modern theatre - including Edward Albee, David Mamet and Sam Shepard — to make it in the Off-Broadway theatre. Always in search of the new and experimental, she was interested not in staging the classics, but in supporting playwrights who were still searching for a voice and an audience. "Shakespeare is not a new writer - he does not need my help," she once said.

Born Lucille Wadler, she changed her name, after attending the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, to Lucille Lortel when her sister and a friend determined that actresses should have alliterative names. Lortel made her Broadway debut in 1925 in the Theatre Guild production of Shaw's Caesar and Cleopatra, with the similarly alliterated Helen Hayes as Cleopatra and Lionel cal engineer who made his fortune manufacturing cigarette papers. He objected to her absence in the evenings, and after finishing her run with Jean Arthur and Claude Rains in The Man who Reclaimed his Head in 1931, she retired from the stage and worked only during in 1947 she resolved to turn the empty barn at her estate in Westport, Connecticut, into a theatre. She christened it the White Barn Theatre and declared that it would function without commercial pressure. From its first production - a play called The Painted Wagon - it became the focus of a new, non-traditional American theatre. Lortel encouraged young playwrights, actors and directors to bring their experimental works. Among the plays that had their premieres. at the White Barn were Eugene Ionesco's The Chairs, Sean O'Casey's Red Roses for Me and Murray Schisgal's The Typists, and the actors who made their debuts at the White Barn included Peter Falk, Vincent Gardenia, George Peppard and Sidney Lumet.

Lortel (1989): helped to establish some of the greatest names in modern drama

living on the estate. So as both a 24th Atwill as Caesar. She then worked steadily on the stage until her marriage in 1930 to the businessman Louis Schweitzer, a chemiwedding anniversary present and a compromise, he bought her the Theatre TICKETS FOR SALE MUSICAL FLIGHTS de Lys in New York's Greenwich Village. the days, on radio and in movie shorts.

In 1955, while Lortel was flourishing in her second incarnation as a producer, her husband was growing weary of the constant flow of actors and directors

In New York, Lortel continue to use her connections and her husband's financial resources to produce plays that were not commercially attractive to Broadway. But despite this policy, her first production, Brecht and Weill's The Threepenny Onerg, ran for seven years, and put Off-Broadway on the map.

The success was gratifying, but the long run frustrated her ambition to mount several productions each year, so in 1956 she began a series of marinée readings, giving actors opportunities to develop their talent. These readings series ran for 20 years and attracted many of the most serious actors of the day. A verse adaptation of Alan Paton's novel Cry the Beloved Country was the first to be staged, followed by readings of poetry by Robert Frost, Archibald MacLeish and W. H. Auden, and plays by O'Casey. Tennessee Williams, Albee and William Inge. When Richard Burton was performing Camelot on Broadway at night, he appeared at Lortel's theatre during the day to read Dylan Thomas's poetry.

Lortel was always hungry for new talent, and travelled to Europe regularly to scout for it. She once said in an interview that the influence of George Devine and the Royal Court was very powerful, and they inspired her to bring that spirit to Off-Broadway In the 1950s and 1960s Lortel was indefatigable in her efforts to mount new plays and expose American audiences to fresh faces and voices. She also made a point of working with blacklist-ed actors. In all she produced 500 plays at her theatre, including Jean Genet's The Balcony, David Mamet's A Life in the Theatre, Sam Shepard's Buried Child and Wendy Wasserstein's Isn't It Romantic.

In her honour, the building was renamed the Lucille Lortel Theatre in 1981. In her last two decades she continued to tackle difficult, non-commercial and provocative themes, including Aids in Larry Kramer's Destiny of Me, and apartheid in Blood Knot by Athol

Fugard. Lornel once said she had no hobbies beyond theatre production. She was a generous donor to theatrical institutions. including Yale Repertory Theatre, and in 1996 she established the Lucille Lortel fellowship for playwrights. She received virtually every award in the theatre except a Tony Award, which is given for plays produced on Broadway. She was the recipient of the Lee Strasberg Lifetime Achievement Award, and was inducted into the Theatre Hall of Fame in 1990.

Louis Schweitzer died in 1971. There were no children of the marriage.

OLD VIC HENRY V

A friendly rivalry exists between the Old Vic and Stratford, and Henry V. now to be seen on both these stages, invites a general comparison. The methods of approach of Mr. Tyrone Guthrie and Mr. Iden Payne, the two producers, are very different.

To brilliancy of colour Mr. Iden Payne adds a consistent solidity of definition. A ship, a castle, a throne room - these on the Stratford stage have value not merely because they create atmosphere but because they are so pleasingly themselves; and the effect is that of turning the pages of a child's picture book which has some pretensions to archaeological accuracy.

Mr. Tyrone Guthrie, whose scenery and costumes are designed by Motley. also seeks the equivalent in colour of a trumpet call. The stage of the Old Vic glows with colour from emblazoned shields and surcoats richly embroidered and from banners which fall forward and fold themselves into tents for the camp scenes, but this polychromatic splendour is set off not by realistically painted vistas but by a simple arrangement of curtains. The appeal is to a more adult aestheticism. The performance as a whole moves with a firmer tread than its country counterpart, and the Henry of Mr. Laurence Olivier moves firmly with it. We find it comparatively easy to overlook the ugly side of the warrior king and to delight in him as the heroic inspirer of a small army which fights and routs another five times its size. Mr. Olivier suggests fortitude and similar undramatic virtues which, because control is of their essence, are by no means easy to represent on the stage. With a minimum of heroic gestures and a clear avoidance of rant, he contrives steadily to impress the mind with the image of a heroic character. The preliminary episode of the tennis balls is given a rare vibrant quality, and here the hard-bitten Archbishop of the resourceful Mr. Harcourt Williams is an enormous help.

Mr. Olivier is also especially effective in his handling of the aristocratic traitors and in defending himself from the criticisms of that incorrigible grouser, Williams: nor does he fail when forced to stand and deliver up his rhetoric at the breach of Harfleur and on the morning of St. Crispin's day. It is a finely judged performance. Miss Jessica Tandy and Miss Ivy St. Helier, borne on a litter for the French lesson, live daintily up to their silken splendour.

OBERT So made strong gains on antral Bank may cut Eurowan rates while the euro reand the dollar after Yugoslavia unexpectedly announced a unilateral ceasefire in Kosovo. The FTSE 100 index of leading shares closed up 85.8 points at 6.415.8 on the first day of the new financial year, having earlier posted an alltime trading high of 6,443.9. The market was also bolstered by a flood of fresh money as investors rushed to meet the final deadline for Peps and a strong rise on Wall Street while European markets were shut for the Easter Monday holiday. However, later gains were limited by a poor start on

Wall Street yesterday with the was falling towards a level Dow Jones industrial average where the ECB may be restanding about 50 points lower back below the 10,000 level by lunchtime in New York. Other European markets also played catch-up with Wall Street, with Frankfurt shares climbing 26 per cent, while Paris shares closed up 1.76 per

Expectations of an ECB rate cut after its meeting tomorrow were tempered, however, by hawkish comments from Jean-Claude Trichet, Governor of the Bank of France, M Trichet gave warning that the euro quired to "demonstrate its vigilance", adding that he saw no "change in tone" to the ECB's policy rounce.

The euro, however, made sharp gains in later trading as traders greeted the news of the Yugoslav ceasefire as positive for the embattled currency. The euro climbed more than a cent from its lows against the dollar to trade at $1.0840. Against the pound, the euro jumped from 67.37p to 68.10p. Sterling also fell sharply against the dollar slipping

more than a cent and a half to $1.5898 - its lowest level since September 1997. Traders said that expectations of further UK rate cuts and the possibility that US rates may rise is helping to depress the pound against the dollar.

However, economists emphasised that the MPC meeting, which begins today, could still prove close run with recent surveys suggesting that the economic growth rate is beginning to pick up again.

Three surveys published yesterday added to the impression that the economy is at a turning point with business confidence sharply improving. The Confederation of British Industry consumer, business and professional services survey reported term average. a rapid improvement in sentiment with companies confident of a return to robust growth in the second half of the year. A separate Institute of Management business confidence survey also showed a sharp upturn in confidence while business enthusiasm for further interest rate cuts is waning, although a clear majority still wants rates to fall further. The

my is still operating at "two speeds" with manufacturing confidence still below its long-

The BDO business trends index also rose for the third consecutive month suggesting that the economy is slowly returning to growth. The survey which uses a "poll of polls" ap-proach, however, is still pointing to sub-trend growth across the year and suggests that there are no immediate signs of rising inflation.

Telewest shares lifted by CWC talk

By Raymond Snoddy WEDIA EDITOR

SHARES of Telewest, the cable operator, shot up nearly 7 per cent to a high of 296kp yesterday after growing speculation that it is close to doing a deal with Cable & Vireless, the international telecoms group. The 19p rise at Tele-

west was a reaction to speculation that C&W is considering a plan to merge the residential side of its majority-owned UK table business — Cable & Wireless Communicalons (CWC) — with Telewest. Under the plan it is speculated that C&W would then absorb the corporate operations of CWC and that CWC would be taken private. CWC and Telewest confirmed yesterday that preliminary discussions were being held between

concerning various cor-Porate options, which may include, among other things, the transfer of

CWC and Telewest".

Yesterday's figures did not overshoot City expectations, but analysts said that they provided fresh evidence of the success of so-called pre-pay mobile phones. Shares of Vodafone and Orange both made significant gains, while shares of BT and Cable & Wireless, which hold large stakes in Cellnet and One2One respectively. also rose.

Pre-pay mobile phones are typically priced at £69.99 and allow customers to pay for calls in advance. All Britain's mobile phone operators now offer pre-pay phones, which can be bought from retailers such as Tesco and Boots, as well as specialist outlets.

However, one of Britain's largest mobile phone retail chains, the PocketPhone Shop, yesterday gave warning that lower-paying pre-pay phone customers are replacing the mobile operators' higherworth consumers. The retailer also said that many consumers are being "mis-sold" pre-pay phones, which do not offer them best value for money. Both the City and mobile phone companies, however, shrugged off these concerns, with analysts reacting most positively to Cellner's first-quarter figures, which showed that it arracted 479,000 net new customers during the period - a 444 per cent increase on the same quarter of 1998. Cellnet, however, remained second to Vodafone, which at-tracted 700,000 net new customers in the UK during the period, and 1.3 million new customers around the world. Vodafone, which is orchestrating a £67 billion merger with America's AirTouch, now has more than 10.4 million customers worldwide. Orange remained in third place according to yesterday's figures, attracting 370,000 net new customers during the first quarter of this year. Trailing behind Orange was One2One, which is expected to be either floated or sold by its current owners, Cable & Wireless of the UK, and MediaOne of the One2One attracted 329,000 new customers during the first quarter, giving it a total of 2.25 million customers.

Tie Rack non-executive directors Gillian Oakes and David Spitz, who will be remaining with the company, said in a statement: "The company is going through a difficult period and we believe this cash offer represents good value for shareholders after taking into consideration the downside risks and the time it will take to achieve an acceptable level of profitability." Tie Rack bows out, page 24

had not received a firm proposal.

The company, which owns extensive exploration acreage in Turkmenistan as well as a 20 per cent share in the Liverpool Bay field, said that it had been approached by a number of parties but Tony Craven Walker, chairman and principal shareholder of Monument, said the company was looking at various options including asset deals as well as acquisitions. "Those talks may or may not lead to a transaction," he said. The talks stem from Mr Craven Walker's belief that the company needs scale to exploit its three core assets: oil and gas production in Liverpool Bay and exploration prospects in Turkmenistan and Algeria. Last month he opened the door to merger talks by saying the company was keen to participate in the consolidation that has swept across the industry, most recently with the proposed BP Amoco takeover of Arco.

Robinson nets £5m in option sale

By Dominic Walsh

GERRY ROBINSON, chairman of Granada, has reaped a profit of more than E5 million after taking advantage of the recent strength of the leisure group's share price to cash in share options. Last week, he exercised 537,500 share options at a cost of almost £1.4 million, selling them on yesterday for nearly E6.7 million — a profit of E5.26 million. Mr Robinson and his family still hold interests in more than 300,000 shares worth a further £3.7 million.

His timing could turn out to be impeccable. Tomorrow ONdigital, the main commercial digital terrestrial TV service, in which Granada has a 50 per cent stake, will announce its first subscriber numbers since the November launch. Analysts are not expecting a spectacular performance. Yesterday, the shares rose 25p to £12.39 — almost double October's low point of 684p after Goldman Sachs added Granada to its recommended

Game on for US virtual toy seller

FROM ANDREW BUTCHER IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK'S Internet madness continued yesterday as eToys, a virtual toy seller, became the latest company to be valued by the stock market at more than $1 billion (£610 million) - despite posting multimillion dollar losses.

The California-based company announced that it would offer about 8 per cent of its shares to the public, raising more than $80 million and giving it a market capitalisation of about $1.1 billion.

Succeeding in the Internet toy market will not be child's play for eToys. The tiny retailer will compete against the name recognition of the likes of Toys 'R' Us, which has as much as 20 per cent of the toy market in the US. For its part, eToys is betting that parents and children will prefer shopping from the com-fort of their homes rather than battle through queues and crowds at shopping malls. To judge from investor response to previous flotations by internet retailers, it would be no surprise if eToys rockets in value as soon as its shares are traded publicly. Last week, shares in Priceline.com. an Internet site where people bid for airline tickets and accommodation, soared more that it was listed. Different from other Internet retailers, eToys has broad support from wholesalers as well as Web-hungry investors. The company has been helped by toy manufacturers that are tired of the unpredictable nature of business at existing toy retailers - Toys 'R' Us cut its toy inventory last year as it struggled to lift profitability. The toy market in the US is than 500 per cent on the day and is dominated by a few large chains. EToys started selling toys in October, 1997, and was the fifth most-visited Internet retailer by last December. However, it made a $15.4 million loss in the nine months to December 31. The company has added 75,000 new customers in the first three months of 1999, giving it a customer base of 365,000.

CBI in co-operation

THE CONFEDERATION OF BRITISH INDUSTRY and the British Chambers of Commerce have begun a series of talks on co-operation that could lead to a merger of the busi-of policy areas including regional work and help for small businesses. Both are strong supporters of the European single currency. Co-operation on these issues would give both parties a stronger voice in dealings with the Government and Now, even though Tie Rack survived as an independent quoted company longer than many of its peers, it has finally succumbed. One of its main suppliers, an Italian familyowned silk scarf and tie manufacturer named Frangi, is buying it. on the wave of the Eighties retailing boom. A successful new category had own nearly 12 per cent of the compa-ny. Frangi, however, is paying just 43bp a share for a company that floated at 145p per share.

The stock market has become an increasingly unfriendly environment for small companies. Tie Rack's trading problems over the past 18 months, which have led to repeated profit warnings, had left it looking very vulnerable.

Mr Bishko feels that he has found a safe home for the company. "I'm very pleased the the company's future will be secure," he said. "From my point of view, I have been working full, full time; perhaps now I will just be full, full time."

He started out in the retail trade, after false starts in dentistry and the law, with a chain of shoe repair shops. When they failed to prosper, he bought a job lot of ties from a wholesaler and put them in the window at cost price. The ties - or so legend has - sold out on the same day.

He received backing from Vadep, a Swiss investment arm of the HSBC banking group, and built up what he claimed was "the smallest multinational in town". Along the way, however. Tie Rack went through some dreadful times. The high street recession at the beginning of the decade and an ill-advised expansion into the US saw the shares fall to a low of 15%p in 1990. The recovery lasted until mid-1997, when the first of its recent profits warnings sent them almost into freefall.

Mr Bishko says he is not bitter about his experiences with the stock market and remains proud of the com-pany's record. "You can look at us and say we floated at 145p and are selling at 43%p, but we did make money."

By Carl Mortished, international business editor proven and recoverable re-

LIBYA'S huge oil reserves could be the next prize for Western energy companies as the country slowly sheds its pariah status and begins to court foreign investment.

Only a day after the two Libvans accused of the Lockerbie bombing were sent to a court in The Netherlands, Italy's Foreign Minister was heading to Tripoli on the first flight since economic sanctions were imposed by the United Nations in 1992. His presence confirms the importance of Libya to Italy: ENI. the Italian oil company already has a large presence in the country; Italy is a big importer of Libyan crude and has ambitions to link Libya to Italy's gas network.

Other oil industry executives are certain to follow as airlines renew potentially lucrative traffic to the country. Western oil-men have had to take circuitous routes to the country, overland via Tunisia or by ship. They will soon flock there as they previously rushed to Iran when the US. last year, agreed to turn a blind eye to non-US investment in the country. Libya has vast oil resources

n Internet toy shop will shortly make its stock market debut with a valuation of more than $1 billion. Never mind the multiple on earnings — there are none — the price is more than 45 times the company's total sales last year.

Clearly, it would be wrong to say that investors have lost their appetite for niche retailers. By comparison with the enthusiasm now being generated by eToys. the reception which greeted the launch of Tie Rack back in 1987 seems positively staid. The share issue, 85 times oversubscribed. was at least for a company with a profit record.

Admittedly, eToys is planning to play on the American stock market, but it might encounter a similarly rapturous welcome in the UK, such is the current enthusiasm for any stock with Internet connections. But niche retailing, whether on line or on station forecourts, has its limits.

The redoubtable Roy Bishko at least held out very much longer than Sophie Mirman, the Sock Shop founder. She found a niche and exploited it but did not know when to stop. Her expansion plans went far beyond the market she had found.

By their very nature, niches have limits. Even bored travellers do not have an insatiable appetite for Mickey Mouse ties and stripey socks. Tie Rack had the ambitions of a big business when it is, essentially, a small one. And small companies are no longer welcome on the stock exchange. But there should still be backers for bright new retailers who can spot that clusive gap in the market. Trained eyes are currently focused on The Holding Com-pany, the brainchild of an Ameriwoman whose enthusiasm for keeping things tidy inspired her to open a shop devoted to help-ing people to keep their things in order. So successful has the first branch been that THC is now developing into a chain. It could even be heading for an appearance on the World Wide Web. It will take years before retailers can gauge how shoppers will divide their spending between the Web and the high street. The likelihood is that there will be room in the marketplace for both eToys and Toys RUs, but the newcomer has a very long way to go before it can rival the buying power of the market leader. And that brings us to the crucial issue of price.

Shoppers are more price conscious than ever, on both sides of the Atlantic. They will not happily pay a premium to buy over the Web, despite the convenience that it offers. And the price charged by the virtual retailer has to take ac-

In the financial markets, no one has been interested in gold, the traditional store of value in times of chaos. Yet shares have blithely broken into new highs in New York and, eventually, in London.

Investors evidently feel that the whole thing is far too short-term to have any destablising or infla-tionary effects beyond the Balkans. The threat of a no-confidence vote succeeding in the Indian Parliament and IMF officials' haggling with Russia are proving more price-sensitive.

Only the euro has truly suffered. Euroland's proximity to the killing fields may have some-thing to do with it, along with the dollar's safe haven status, especially for Americans. But traders just love any excuse to kick a currency when it is down.

The pragmatic, unsentimental, market view yesterday was therefore different to that of Nato. Serbia's Easter "ceasefire" was the reality on the ground and spelt the beginning of the end of this conflict, regardless of Nato's aims or the fate of the Kosovars. So euros bounced back against the dollar and trod on the pound, the old man in the middle of the road. The euro's post-launch debacle is not over yet but if and when it concludes, sterling may find all the bullies pointing at it and gilt-edged prices under pressure. Meanwhile, there seems nothing to stop shares rising. London's FTSE 100 index would in any case have reacted yesterday to its twin's advance in New York late on Maundy Thursday. Over Easter weekend, there was more short-term good news as tens of thousands of savers rushed to buy last-minute person-al equity plans while stocks last-ed. Most of that money will have to go straight into UK equities. The Pep inflow was a reminder of a more potent force. Liquidity in pension funds remains high, a relic of the autumn 1998 correc-tion that stopped the share index improving on its July 1998 peak until about six weeks ago.

Share ratings are already dizzily high by historical standards as well as in relation to extremely dull profit trends. The only force likely to cause another massive "correction" is a rise in shortterm interest rates. The US Federal Reserve is doing its best to hold off. But the bad news for market is eventually more likely to come from a loss of nerve in Washington than in Belgrade.

Quiet man is the big noise at C&W hen Graham Wallace took over from Dick Brown at Cable & Wireless, he did not relinquish all interest in his former role. Since C&W continues to hold 53 per cent of Cable & Wireless Communications. Mr Wallace still has some sway over what goes on there. In fact, the profile of Greg Clarke, his successor as chief ex-ecutive at CWC, has been so low that one might assume Mr Wallace is still running the show, and continuing to negotiate the deal with Telewest which he had on his wish list last year. But Mr Wallace's plans go far beyond that sensible merger. Dy-namic Dick Brown led the first wave of restructuring at C&W but there is much further to go. Quiet, understated Graham Wallace may be the man to create a C&W which can grab its share of the glamour ratings in which most of the telecoms sector now basks.

Deal-hungry bankers are besieging him with complicated plans. Mr Wallace may be wary: after all, he is now having to ask the courts to help him to sort out C&W's $1.75 billion Internet purchase from the sharp shooters at MCI. So why not just opt for the easy ways of demonstrating C&W's attractions? Float mobile phone operator One2One; sell down the stakes in Hong Kong Telecom and Optus, and, perhaps, in CWC.

That should make clear that investors are currently getting the rest of C&W for a song. Mr Wallace is tuning up to take the company into the hit parade.

Monumental struggle

No sooner do Enterprise Oil and Lasmo stop talking about how they might engineer a friendly get together than they find themselves at odds. Monument Oil is the cause. Tim Eggar has but a negligible stake in the firm but the former Tory energy minister may still find his political skills of use in playing one potential bidder off against another. Who would have emerged as chief executive in a merged L'Enterprise is unclear but now Pierre Jungels and Joe Darby have the chance to show their strengths.

Jarvis shares hit after warning on cost of strikes

By ROBERT LEA

JARVIS, the rail and roads maintenance group said yesterday that months of industrial action by members of the Rail, Maritime and Transport union (RMT) should soon end. But it said the intermittent strikes would result in profits for the past financial year falling short of City forecasts. After the warning the shares fell nearly 12 per cent yesterday. Jarvis, which has expanded rapidly over the past three years to account for the maintenance of a fifth of the UK rail network, said yesterday that a new pay and conditions deal had been thrashed out. It said RMT members would vote on the new deal in the next three eks and that the proposals would carry a recommendation from the RMT executive. The deal is, according to Henry Lafferty, Jarvis finance director, "ground-breaking after decades of little change in working arrangements". It means that night-time and weekend working will no longer be classed as overtime but that RMT members will now receive a higher basic rate of pay. Mr Lafferty said its traditionally lower-paid workers would not now have tions. Paris Moayedi, chief execto put in extra time to make up utive, said: "It would be unrealtheir pay packets and that they would be able to achieve the same levels of income from being on duty fewer hours. On the flip-side, said Mr Lafferty, this would give the comparty greater flexibility in overnight and weekend rostering. However, the prolonged industrial action over changes in working practices, which had been going on since last June, will take the shine off Jarvis's results for the year to March 31. Announcing that the results will not meet market expectaistic to assume that such a fundamental overbaul of working practices could have been achieved without some tension between the parties."

He said: During the indus-trial action, Jarvis Rail took strong action to ensure that the company maintained its services. Inevitably, however, the cost of implementing this action had an adverse effect on the company's operating results. This was compounded by the wholly unrelated and well-publicised decision by Railtrack to defer certain renewal activities while the criteria which should be applied to renewals decisions

By Saeed Shah

ASHTENNE HOLDINGS: the industrial property investment company, has made a recommended cash offer for Cleveland Trust. a property company with a similar portfolio. At 111p per Cleveland share, the offer values Cleveland at £33 million.

The offer represents a premium of about 47 per cent to the closing middle-market price of 751/2p per Cleveland share on September 9, 1998, the last dealing day prior to the an-nouncement by Cleveland that Trefick had acquired a 5.49 per cent holding in the com-pany. Trefick an Isle of Man investment vehicle holds a 14 per cent stake in Ashtenne and has built up a 28 per cent stake in Cleveland.

The purchase will be financed from Ashtenne's existing resources. Ashtenne said acquisition of Cleveland is in line with its strategy to increase its industrial holdings in the UK.

Cleveland, which owns and operates the port of Boston in Lincolnshire, reported pre-tax profits of £1.3 million (£997,000) on turnover of £5 million (£4.3 million) for the six months to September 30. 1998. Net assets were E33 million, with asset value per share at 110.5p, compared with

Despite the turbulent conditions in the financial markets, ING Group closed the year 1998 with good results. All core activities contributed to the net profit increase, with the exception of the international corporate & investment banking activities. Especially the operations in the Benelux reported favourable results.

The total contribution of the acquired companies to net profit was NLG 1,359 million, after deduction of finance charges. These contributions were made by BBL (NLG 1,154 million), Equitable of Iowa (NLG 161 million) and Furman Selz (NLG 44 million). Without non-recurring items of, on balance, NLG 1,247 million, the operational net profit amounted to

NLG 4,635 million (-3.5%). The non-recurring items were the profits made on the sale of the non-life insurance operations in the US (NLG 833 million), Libertel (NLG 445 million), Kredietbank Belgium (NLG 377 million) and credit insurer NCM (NLG 53 million) as well as additions to special provisions for low interest rates outside the Netherlands (NLG 331 million) and the Millennium Calamity Fund

The net profit from the insurance operations rose by 49.2% to NLG 4,247 million. Excluding the nonrecurring items, the operational net profit amounted to NLG 3,600 million (+23.7%). Equitable of lows and higher sales results from equities, convertible bonds and real estate contributed to this increase. The global financial crisis depressed the net profit from the banking operations, which decreased by 22.6% to NLG 1,635 million. Excluding non-recurring items, an operational net profit remained of NLG 1,035 million (-48.0%). This decrease can be entirely attributed to the non-recurring strong decline of the trading results and the extra additions to the debt provisions. The item Additions to the provision for loan losses of the banking operations increased by NLG 1,155 million to NLG 2 billion, of which NLG 1 billion related to Asia and Russia.

Assets under management went up by 45.3% to NLG 558 billion. Due to the uncertain economic conditions in several important markets, the Executive Board considers it premature at this stage to make a firm profit forecast for 1999. However, ING Group has a strong financial and commercial foundation. Therefore the Executive Board faces the future with confidence.

Telecoms sector climbs on more merger talk

INVESTORS resumed the scramble for telecommunications stocks amid more talk of mergers and figures showing spectacular rises in mobile phone subscriptions.

Telewest Communications led the charge, leaping 6.8 per cent to 29614p in what was the third-biggest rise in FTSE 100 stocks on the day. Speculation centred on the possibility of Telewest merging with Cable & Wireless Communications, CWC shares rocketed 3612p to 754450, and those of its parent, Cable & Wireless, added 23 pt to 775 p. Vodafone Group gained 24p to £12.0b, Orange surged 34p to 928p and Securicor, which owns part of Cell-

net, added 5p to 573p. Analysts described the mobile telephone subscription figures for the March quarter as "spectacular" and "exceptional, saying that they refocused investors' attention on the industry's huge growth profile. Energis followed suit, jumping 77p to £19.05, as did BT.

with a rise of 54p to £10.82. The renewed appetite for telecommunications stocks combined with another surge on Wall Street on Monday to push the FTSE 100 index to a record close of 6,415.3, up 85.3 points. It peaked at 6,443.9 in mid-morning trade before profit-takers moved in Sentiment was also buoyed by strong performances on Far Eastern markets overnight

THE market spoilt the party at AstraZeneca vesterday, knocking the shares 9lp lower to £29.46 on the first day of trading in the newly merged drugs group. A pause for breath was overdue - Zeneca shares had climbed from £24 only last month as investors positioned themselves for AstraZeneca's heavier weight-

The market's nagging worry is the impact of the patent expiries on Losec and Zestril, the Zeneca heart drug, that could start to bite from 2001. Tom McKillop, the chief executive, talked confidently about overcoming this hurdle yesterday. Not everyone shares his faith in perprazole, the follow-up to Losec that will face a wave of cheap competition.

Additionally, Merrill Lynch believes that it has detected the first signs of a change in sentiment in favour of cyclicals, perhaps bringing an end to the extraordinary run enjoyed by the big drug stocks.

It is this track record that should form the biggest worry about paying £30 for AstraZene. ca. Within the last 18 months, Zeneca shares were trading for little more than £17. Such high ratings leave the sector vulnerable to the faltering anempts at US healthcare reform and other nasty surprises. Take profits.

Monument

IF MONUMENT Oil & Gas is prepared to quit, what hope is their for the survival of lesser fry? Tony Craven Walker, Monument's chairman, has always been regarded as the cleverest in-and-out merchant in the volatile exploration sector. Not for him, huge teams of geologists and vast production teams. Monumeni was always an investor ready to take a chance.

Monument has a knack in timing things well; it raised £100 million last spring, tap-ping the share market before it fell away with the oil price. It is cash-rich in a sector burdened with debt and Mr Cramay be a buyer rather than a seller. But the colours at the masthead look more like the white flag of surrender than

Monument has built up an interesting collection of assets; it has found oil but needs to get it to market.

Transport in Turkmenistan costs $6 per barrel, offering opportunity but no margin to-day. At $14 per barrel, highrisk exploration is a mug's game; certainty is required but opportunities in the estab-lished fields of the Persian Gulf and Iran are being oursued aggressively by European majors, soon to be fol-

Walker Greenbank

WALKER GREENBANK is a company with very good intentions. It says that it is confident of "a considerable recovery" but also let shareholders know of several reasons why this could all go wrong.

Factors in its favour are an improvement in underlying trading in the second half, a further pick-up in trade at Harlequin and contract fabries since the year end, a strong balance sheet and greater controls on costs.

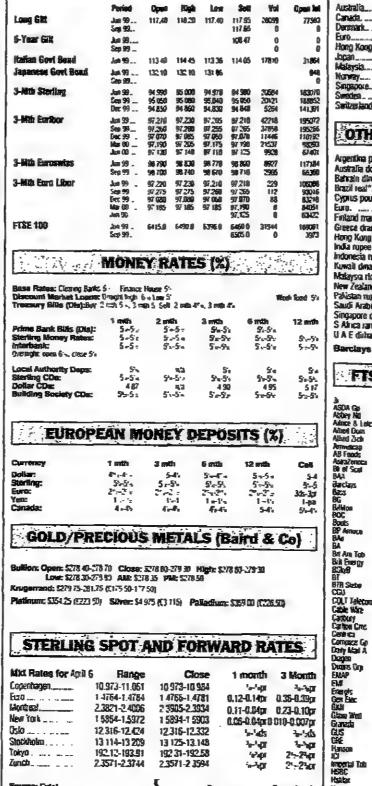

Among the macroeconomic worries, the strength of the pound could certainly have a huge effect on the company's profitability as 44 per cent of turnover is derived from exports. Also of concern will be the admission that restructuring the European business will involve some exceptional costs in the first half of the current year.

But what is likely to have an even bigger effect on the share price is investor sentiis firmly turned against such small manufacturers

With a few clouds hanging over the company's head. and in the absence of any overwhelmingly compelling buy story, these shares are likely to remain in the doldrums for some time to come.

the concept of the neutral rate of interest has been making a frequent appearance recently in the debate over UK monetary policy. For interested onlookers this trendy piece of econospeak is inherently attractive. It does not owe its origins to complex economic theory and can be explained easily in layman's

erms as follows. Interest rates are said to be at their "neutral" level when they neither add to nor subtract from the level of economic growth. At least, in principle, this has implications for policymakers. As a rule of thumb, base rates should be below their neutral level when the authorities wish to stimulate the pace of activity. Conversely, they should be above it when the economy is required to cool down.

Where the simplicity of this notion breaks down is in assessing where the neutral rate actually is. There is no firm consensus among economists. Minutes from recent Monetary Policy Committee meetings suggested that neutrality could lie in a range somewhere between 4.5 per cent to 6.5 per cent. hardly a definitive guide towards deciding where to set interest rates. A growing view though, and one expressed by at least one mem-ber of the MPC, is that neutrality is represented by base rates at about 5.5 per cent. The inference is therefore that monetary policy is currently neutral.

This begs the question: if the current stance of monetary policy is neutral, then why is it? The economy is virtually at a standstill with domestic and international factors continuing to pose risks to the downside. Fiscal policy is argua-bly expansionary, but only mildly so. Moreover, from industry's point of view, sterling is unhelpful-ly strong. Put plainly, base rates should be at a level that encourages more growth. In the absence of a sudden improvement in economic prospects, this leaves two possi-bilities. Either rates have signifi-cantly further to fall or else the neu-tral rate is actually higher than 5.5 per cent. We think the latter is the case. Our estimate of neutrality is between 6 per cent and 6.5 per cent, consistent with the average for base rates since the publication of the Bank of England's first Inflation Report in early 1993.

Looking at the range of interest rates since then reveals an interesting story. Policy was clearly restrictive in June last year when rates were raised to 7.5 per cent. No argument here. But over the period, base rates have only been below 5.5 per cent between February and September 1994, when Kenneth at 5.25 per cent. It is nigh on impossible to believe that during these six years monetary policy has been expansionary for just seven the Bank's projections of GDP growth on a scenario of rates remaining unchanged at 5.5 per cent. Far from remaining flat, the central path sees the economy gathering sion of 1 per cent this year to a pace approaching 3 per cent in early 2001. This reinforces our view that the current level of interest rates is generous rather than neutral.

There are two implications of this analysis. First, it should be remembered that current economiccircumstances are far from normal and that the reason for rates being as low as they are is to counteract an extraordinary set of deflationary economic shocks. In the near term, interest rates are likely to be brought down again. But at some point, when the economy has begun to stage a more convincing recovery, they will probably need to rise to keep a lid on growth and prevent the build-up of inflationary pressures. This contradicts the often heard view that argues that rates will continue on their downward path over the next couple of

Secondly, there is the issue of the UK's membership of the single currency. For sterling to enter safely. the Government recognises that Britain's business cycle must converge with that of the eurozone.
This, of course, is true, but to use another a piece of jargon, this condition is necessary but not sufficient. With just one stance of monetary policy applying over the euro area, it is critical that the neutral levels of interest rates in the UK and the core eurozone economies are similar. If they are not, then rates could be acting as a restraint on, say, the German economy while simultaneously creating a boom at home. We would argue that the UK's neutral rate currently lies above that in Germany, part-ly because of higher inflation, and if this does not change, the UK's participation in EMU could be fraught with difficulties.

Note here the dangerously rapid growth of the Irish economy. made worse by the cuts in rates before it joined the single currency. Over the next three to four years. it is possible that UK inflation and expectations of inflation, are squeezed relative to those in the eurozone. In these circumstances, the neutral rate of interest would fall and help the UK on to the path of convergence. But there is no guarantee that this will occur naturally and the assumption that it will seems to signify the triumph of hope over experience.

City reserves judgment in spite of mobile phone frenzy

months, a staggering 4.3 million Britons have bought mobile phones. The evidence is everywhere: from train carriages filled with the din of one-way conversations, to classrooms where children send electronic messages to each other instead of listening to machers. Wherever there is human life, it seems, the irritating electronic trill of a mobile phone is not far behind.

This growth has been accompanied by an enormous amount of corporate activity. Vodufone, Britain's largest mobile phone operator, is currently orchestrating a £67 billion merger with its American rival Airtouch, while One2One is preparing for an £11 billion flotation or sale. Meanwhile, whether or not to buy the 40 per cent of Cellnet it does not Yet there is evidence to suggest that the mobile phone industry is beginning to question the marketing ploy that has helped to provoke such super-charged growth. The ploy is "pre-pay": a means by which consumers can buy mobile phone handsets for as little as £69.99, then pay for calls in advance using vouchers costing between £5 and £50. In Italy, pre-pay was seen as the only way to sell phones to a

race which loves talking but hates signing pieces of paper. By abolishing contracts and calls in advance, Italy's mobile phone operators stumbled upon one of the 20th century's most effective marketing initia-tives. Now, nearly 40 per cent of Italians own a mobile phone. Pre-pay caught-on Britain last year and has since opened up the mobile phone market to millions of consumers who previously felt they could not afford it. Parents have been able to buy their children phones without worrying about huge bills, and consumers with bad credit histories have also been able to take the plunge. The craze for mobile phones was ing pre-pay services, com-

At present, only about 25 per cent of Britons own a mobile phone, but many believe this will double within the next two years. As Alan Lyons, a tele-coms analyst at ABN Amro, says: "Mobile phones are clear-ly going to achieve mass market penetration in the same way that television sets and video recorders have. Everyone will have one."

The percentage of mobile phone users now taking advantage of pre-pay services is astonishing. About 32 per cent of Vodafone's customers are us-fuelled by high street retailers pared with just 5.6 per cent such as Tesco and Boots stock-last year. Meanwhile, 40 per are using pre-pay, up from 8 per cent last year.

Although the City has reacted positively to the number of customers attracted by prepay, it remains uneasy about just how much money they will spend. Industry analysts are also concerned about Britain's army of new mobile phone users abandoning their products when they realise how much they cost to run.

Other questions have been raised over the ability of mobile phones companies to cope with pre-pay's massive success. Vodaione admits that its call centres nearly went into meltdown after being bomcustomers, while customers of Orange have had to put up with 30-minute delays before being connected to the company's customer service staff. Mr Lyons admits that prepay customers are "clearly not as profitable" as contract customers. But he adds: "Of course I would prefer that we could get the current growth rates without pre-pay. But without pre-pay we would be moving up the penetration curve much more slowly."

Not everyone is so optimis-tic. Mobile phone retailers have seen their margins slashed by up to 40 per cent because of pre-pay phones. Si-mon Jordan, the brash co-founder of the PocketPhone Shop, which has more than 120 outlets throughout Britain, says: "Pre-pay is massive, but if it's not controlled it could be dangerous. The network operators are getting big numbers of users, but the reality is that they are lower-return users." He adds that, in his opinion, network operators are already trying to nudge potential customers away from pre-pay services by lowering the price of contracts. You'll find that standard contracts will be re-duced in price," he says, "Already. Vodafone has changed its cheapest contract from £17.99 a month to £14.99. You will see contracts below £10 a month by the end of this year."

ccording to most analysts, the success of pre-pay will not be de-cided until Vodalone and Orange publish financial results later this year. Even if analysts conclude that it is a good thing, mobile phone commies will have to work much harder for both their shareholders and customers to stay ahead. The final quarter figmillion Britons buy mobile phones — caused many analysts to totally rethink their ex-pectations for the sector.

There is now a feeling that there is little more that mobile phone companies can do to impress the City. And, given the huge amount of mobile phone company shares being issued around the world, even the City's enthusiasm for the likes of Vodafone and Orange is subfly waning. All of a sudden, gaining 4.3 million customers in just six months no longer seems such an impressive feat.

From Mr Keith Chambers Sir. A letter from the chairman of the Bradford & Bingley Building Society has gone out attached to a voting form.

It begs the question by commencing: "A small group of members want (sic) your building society to become a

What it should have said is that a requisite number of members to propose a motion has called for a vote to see whether the membership as a whole wants the society to convert: the numbers of those either for or against conversion are surely not yet known hence the vote.

By manipulating language along the lines of "someone has stolen next year's election results", building society directors have once again shown a cavalier attitude towards members - their employers - and have surely weakened any case they wish to make. Perhaps they will now have the courage of their convictions and promise that, should a society convert, they will themselves refuse to accept any so-called windfall payout. Yours faithfully. KEITH CHAMBERS. 19 Hill Road. Basingstoke,

THREE years ago Sir Peter Davis and the scheme was approved. Now. was at the centre of a little spat. The Pru chief executive was highlighted by some investors as the main beneficiary of a long-term incentive plan, which they thought breached the guidelines set for these schemes. TRAVELLERS to Cornwall know there are only two routes into the coun-One is across Bodmin moor and the other is over the Tamar Suspension Bridge. So it is with some concern that I report that Kvaerner, the accident-prone Norwegian builder. has signed a £24 million deal to widen the bridge in time for the millennium.

But isn't there an even more significant event occurring in Cornwall before then — August's solar eclipse. My man in the hard hat assures me that the work will not even close one lane of the bridge during peak hours. So if you are stuck in a 20-mile-tailback, you know who to blame.

AG BARR has trod on a few corns while promoting its undrinkable soft drink, Irn-Bru. Its advert, featuring a cow saying: "When I'm a burger I want to be washed down with Irn-Bru", led the Advertising Standards Authority's list of most complained about ads of 1998. A total of 589 people objected, 418 more than the next most objection-able — a TCP advert featuring a man being eaten by a tiger. The ASA did not uphold any of the complaints.

arrive at our office in Victoria, London, at 8.45am, make a cup of tea then check the e-mail. We receive up to 50 e-mail inquiries and bookings a day from all over the world. Then confirm the meetings that Denis and Odette have today, with clients, tour operators or to view venues. Then have my daily ten-minute briefing with them both — they are of-ten out of the office — before moving on to their dictation tapes

This takes a while because I am interrupted by phone calls all day. Denis is not here to take calls so I have to know what is going on and take bookings and answer client queries. Many of our callers are from overseas and are calling to organise incentive groups and conferences.

11:30am: Denis and Odette phone in for messages, and Denis asks me to send out brochures, and transparencies to clients who want to use them in their own brochures. He also asks me to write short adverts to go with them.

12.30pm: Grab a quick sand-wich. I have worked here for eight months; it is an extremely sociable job and the atmosphere is buzzing. There are always lots of events going on, which I am invited to. I have been to the Party Bus nightclub tour, a James Bond night and paintballing with Awesome Events. I am getting married this year, and some friends are arranging my hen weekend through Awesome Events — though I have no idea what will be taking place.

I try to work on my own projects during the afternoon. I am working with a website designer at the moment redesigning the Party Express site and a new site for Awesome Events. My role has really developed since I first started and I'm now involved with such things as marketing, and have just been on our stand for two days at the British Travel Trade Fair at the NEC in Birmingham. I am also setting up databases for both companies. It is very busy and hard work, but really challenging and rewarding.

3pm: Adjust the colours and put the finishing touches to a voucher wallet I am designing on my computer. This is to contain the tickets, maps, itineraries and everything else the client needs for the event that they have booked. I thought it would be a good idea to design special envelopes so the client has everything available; they are also more eye-catching.

4pm: Do the weekly invoicing to our tour operators and chase up any outstanding invoices, then check through the pile of things people have put on Denis's desk, taking away and dealing with things he does not need to see. Then I call him with any important messages.

Post's done. Time for a chocolate bar and sushi

We know that you hoard food in your office drawer, says Amy Anderson. But which snacks are the best?

هَكُذَا مِنَ الرُّصلِ

Four top drawer at work is meant for diaries, pens and Tippex - but according to a study of UK office staff, it is more likely to contain the better part of a supermarket snack counter. The study of "top-drawer grazing" by Office Angels reveals that food hoarded ranges from choc-olate and crisps to yoghurt and ready-made meals.

Although an encouraging 42 per cent of those surveyed opted for fruit as their preferred snack, 57 per cent were more partial to chocolate or biscuits. One in ten admitted stockpiling snacks in case they felt

In the drinks department, one in ten of us stores herbal tea in our drawer, while 31 per cent prefer standard teabags. The most popu-lar drink to hoard, though, is coffee. When asked how many times they dipped into their snack supply, 75 per cent of those questioned said that they "grazed" once or twice a day, while many others admitted eating at their desks at least three times daily. Men are just as tempted to sub-sist on snacks as women, it seems, but less likely to share their food with others. And when office staff of either sex run out of snacks, they are likely to raid a colleague's supply. One in five staff in the survey confessed to filching food. So why do so many of us keep a snack drawer? Hunger is the obvious explanation, but other reasons that emerged from the survey were boredom, stress relief and using food to boost concentration. The last of these is debatable, however research carried out at Middlesex University found that the smells of chocolate and spearmint distracted people from their work.

Rather distasteful was the revelation that more than one in ten of us stores food at work that is well past its sell-by date. Office drawers contain such delights as rotting bananas, unrefrigerated yoghurt, soft rice-cakes, bars of mouldy chocolate and curling sandwiches. Odd eating habits? We have those, too, Office Angels reveals. Chocolate and cheese-and-onion crisp sandwiches are just the start. Other staff admit dunking toast in

yoghurt with their fingers and wolf-ing three chocolate bars in rapid succession. Many people confessed to swallowing junk food at work that they would never eat at home.

Office "grazing" is clearly a deep-ly ingrained habit, with chocolate emerging as the single most popu-lar comfort food. But it can be expensive: 80 per cent of us spend between £1 and £5 a week on snacks, some more than £10. The nutritionist Kate Stringer suggests that for those in search of healthy snacking options, the best bets are carbohydrate foods (bread, cereals) that will help to keep your blood sugar levels constant; fresh fruit unsalted nuts (in moderation): sunflower seeds (rich in zinc): orange juice (vitamin C); and, if you really must, a little dark organic chocolate (plenty of iron).

Needless to say, cigarettes, alco-hol and chocolate in excess are not good for your health. Much better are bean salads, tuna, chicken, cottage cheese and yoghurt, for instance, with herbal or fruit tea. And whether you snack healthily or not, take a stroll around the block before lunch.

But if that is healthy office grazing, the habit can lead to odd, or at least mildly antisocial, food choices. For PR executive Emily Morris,

22, the perfect snack is - fish sticks. "I work in a room with just four other people and they are used to the smell of my fish sticks by now," she says, "but when a new person comes in, they put their hands over their nose. I know I could put them in the fridge, but having them in my drawer means that I can snack away all day without having to move from my chair."

ate Stringer says: There is nothing wrong with snacking on fish sticks they are much better for you than chocolate. But I am not sure that keeping them in a drawer is a good idea. Offices get very warm and by not refrigerating her snacks, Emily is putting herself at risk from food poisoning." Claire Coward, a 25-year-old marketing assistant, prefers to keep her drawer full of fruit, cereal bars, yoghurt and bottled water. "I have quite a stressful job," she says, "so I need foods that keep my energy up. The sugar rush that choco-late gives you is very short-lived and you end up craving more."

Kate Stringer says: "Claire has the right outlook. And as she cannot do much exercise during the day, it also means that she is not exposing herself to weight gain."

Leonard cal Candide was on its pre-Broadway try-out in Boston in 1956. the show was in trouble. The creative team, including the director Sir Tyrone Guthrie and the playwright Lillian Hellman, who wrote the book. looked impressive on paper but their contributions were refusing to gel. Bernstein sent for a young lyricist who was working with him on another project to offer his advice. It was Stephen Sondheim.

"I was 25, and supposed to tell people of the calibre of Guthrie and Hellman what they were doing wrong," he recalls, still awed at the presumptuous role he had been invited po fulfil.

Bernstein was still drafting in new songs as the produc-tion approached its Broadway first night - and they sounded familiar to Sondheim. The composer had been working simultaneously on Candide and West Side Story, for which Sondheim had been hired to provide the lyrics. "Lennie was switching songs from one show to the other. They were

One Hand, One Heart had been intended for Candide under the title of One but ended up in West Side Story: the melody of Officer Krupke was pinched from a Candide Get You in the End; and another song called Happy We went score had nothing to do with my own music but Oscar Hammerstein said West Side Story was too good an opportunity to miss. He persuaded me. My suggestion for Candide was that Michael Flanshould write the lyrics. He would have been perfect. But he was wheelchair-bound and became impossible."

Bernstein's show has since then enjoyed as picaresque a journey as Voltaire's eponymous hero and now, more han 40 years later, Sondheim is still active on the sidelines as the musical comes up for a radical reworking at the National Theatre under the director John Caird — "assisted by Trevor Nunn", as the credits have it. It was Caird who secured the rights, persuaded the various estates involved to allow him to revise the show and sought new lyrics from the American songwriter Richard Wilbur, who worked on the original 1956 version, and one new set of lyrics from Sondheim. bring out his aristocratic qualities. I could see the sense. After its Broadway failure, Candide managed a short West End run, in which the title role was taken by Denis Ouiliev, who now plays the elderly Martin in the new revival. Bernstein continued working on the show: it played in various stock companies in America but had to wait until 1972 be-lic recognition. That was when Hal Prince devised a ground-breaking production, first given in a studio at the Brooklyn Academy of Arts then transferring to Broadway as the hit of the season. The Voltaire original was ut Bernstein felt Prince's production. despite its public suc-cess, had drifted too far from his original intention. He increasingly felt it belonged in an opera house; he rescored it for operatic voices and it was staged by New York City Opera in 1982. Six years later Jonathan Miller directed it for Scottish Opera with a new libretto by the late John Wells. It also enjoyed a successful run at the Old Vic.

When Nunn and Caird embarked on their plan to create an ensemble company occupying the Olivier in a series of themed productions, they looked for a musical with something to say about contemporary life and chose Candide with the intention of restoring as much as possible of Voltaire's searching philoso-phy. Caird says: "Candide is a comedy with a serious moral theme about issues that are relevant today. We were looking for works that would make people ask what is the morality that helps you to live your life in a time of war, greed and capitalism at the end of the 20th century. Candide fits the tumbling through the darkness of the Atlantis Gallery in East London, we suddenly discover that a precipitous drop separates us from the screen where Douglas Gordon's Feature Film is projected. Halted by a barrier, we stare down into the shadows and realise the aptness of the void below. For Gordon has de-cided to tackle Hitchcock's Vertigo in this, his first London exhibition since winning the Turner Prize three years ago. And the dizzying fear suffered by James Stewart, as he climbs a belitower in pursuit of the elusive Kim Novak, is echoed by the unease we feel on this lofty platform.

Our disorientation is increased by the images on the screen. Unlike his previous homage to Hitchcock, a 1993 tour de force called 24 Hour Psycho, Gordon's new film contains no visible trace of Vertigo itself. He concentrates instead on James Conlon, the charismatic chef d'orchestre of the Paris Opéra, conducting a per-formance of Bernard Herrmann's score for Vertigo. Gordon does not even offer a glimpse of the 100 musicians under Conion's control. The face, arms and hands of the conductor are all we see, and they prove mesmerising in their own right.

Conlon responds to the heightened emotions animating Herrmann's score with athletic sensitivity. The sounds seem to run through his body with the force of an electrical discharge, reaching a climax in the quicksilver motion of fingers alert to every musical nuance, Even when the orchestra lapses into silence, during the periods when Vertigo's manic story develops without Herrmann's aid, Conlon does not allow his involvement to lessen. Gordon's camera lingers on his face for a while, and the tears in the conductor's eyes show the depth of his engagement with the unfolding narra-

As a result, Gordon succeeds in presenting an audaclous alternative to the experience normally offered by Vertigo. In a conventional cinematic presentation, Herrmann's contribution is always subservient to the overall impact of Hitchcock's directorial vision. Audiences may even remain unaware of its exceptional potency, and give Hitchcock unqualified credit for Vertigo's ability to sear the imagination. By slicing off Herrmann's work and holding it up for inspection. Gordon enables us to assess it with far greater clarity. And by showing how ardently Conion responds to the score, the full extent of its capacity to ensnare us in Vertigo's nightmarish convolutions is revealed.

Anyone familiar with Gordon's previous work will appreciate how his fascination with Conlon's movements relates to earlier concerns. Conlon's exclamatory manual gestures reminded me in particular of a based on a film showing a hand endlessly repeating the act of firing a gun. He called it Trigger-Finger. and the neurosis it exposed is far removed from Conlon's infinitely supnle responses. All the same, Gordon uses hands in both these contrasted works to disclose a surprising amount about the emotional condition of the men themselves.

Nor does he stop there. As we gaze down at the screen enlivened by Conlon's exertions, our eyes gradually notice another film flickering at the far end of the vast Atlantis hall. A staircase half-hidden in the gloom enables us to descend. The distant film turns out to be Vertigo itself, far smaller in size and projected modestly on to a wall by equipment resting on the floor. The almost offhand presentation suggests that Gordon intends it as a footnote to the principal offering. But once I started watching Vertigo, it would not let me go. My eyes kept moving between the two rival images, eager to follow Hitchcock's narrative and yet determined to see how Conlon tire gallery with its doomed Mahlerian disquiet.

more complex by robbing Vertigo of its dialogue. The actors mouth soundlessly at each other, just as they did in the films Hitchcock would have seen during his youth. But there is scant reliance on the melodramatic acting that so often fuelled silent movies. The absence of dialogue made me aware of Hitchcock's restraint as a director - Stew-

the most part reined-in. Apart from scenes of high anxiety, like the dream sequence where Stewart is tortured by neurotic memory-flashes, the actors are notable for their stillness, their reluctance to rely on rhetorical flourishes of any kind.

In such a hushed context, where a substantial court scene reduces all its players to a notably undemonstrative level, the return of the music has an extraordinary impact. At one point, after a bout of soundless conversation, Stewart re-enters a room in distress. Herrmann's score amtor's anguish an intensity it would not otherwise have attained.

itchcock may well have found his composer too emotionally effusive: there is undoubtedly a clash between Herrmann's unabashed late Romanticism and the understatement dictating so much of Hitchcock's visual style. Against the odds, though, an unlikely chemistry is established between the two men's approaches. Without Herrmann, Hitchcock might well look stilted at times. And shorn of Hitchcock's rigour. Herrmann could easisound embarrassingly lush. When they come together, the fusion goes a long way towards explaining why Vertigo exerts such a compulsive, lingering hold over us. Ultimately, however, Gordon's in-stallation sustains our attention through the interplay between Vertigo and the film he has made. The longer I looked at Conion conducting, the more I realised that he seemed to inhabit a Hitchcockian strange resemblance sometimes between details of Conlon's frowning face and Anthony Perkins in Psycho. Although he is manifestly in charge of an orchestra, Conlon becomes one of the characters in the complex, multilayered drama played out here. When Stewart's haunted face caught in close-up, enmeshed within a spider's web at the height of the nightmare sequence, he looks utterly alone. Conlon likewise seems marooned in a nocturnal void dur-

rests on his features for a while. He appears overcome by the same auturnnal melancholy that afflicts Stewart in his futile search for the unattainable Novak. And Conlon's ability to identify so strongly with this sadness helps him to locate it in Herrmann's score, ensuring that the music is sometimes as overwhelmingly insistent as the Mahler soundtrack deployed by Visconti throughout Death in Venice - another film dominated by the doomed pursuit of a destructive infamation.

Gordon does not make it easy to ship between Hitchcock, Herrmann. Conion and his own equally obsessive art. Only repeated viewings would disclose everything worth extracting from their interaction; and the absence of seating in this austere hall obliged me to end up squatting on the floor, swivelling from one screen to the next and back again in an attempt to absorb the array of competing images on offer. It is a stremuous experience, and yet the inordinate demands made by Gordon end up tallying with the ordeal Stewart forces himself to undergo during the film.

All the disparate elements combine most arrestingly in the final minutes, when Stewart builties Novak into ascending the tower one more time. The brutality of his struggle with her is surprising and then alarming. Herrinann's music responds to the challenge with bectle conviction, while Conlon attains a frenzy of gestures on the other screen. As Stewart goads Novak up the stairwell, the conductor's hands stab, claw, thrust and swoop white arcs of agitation. Conion drives his orchestra onwards with the single-minded vehemence Hitchcock unleashed on his actors as they stagger to the top. They are all caught up in the same demented trajectory. And nothing, not even the swift intervention of the nun who sounds the bell, can prevent the tragedy from ending in frecfall.

he one day devoted to the arts and culture of Northern Ireland during the Barbican's Irish festival From The Heart came at a pregnant moment on Easter Day, amid the knowledge that the peace process was about to enter a solemn week.

Yet with Tommy Makem heading the bill. it was never going to be a sombre occasion. The 66 year-old veteran began performing with the Clancy Brothers in the late 1950s and his style has changed little since. His jocular presence and mixture of sentimental songs such as Wild Mountain Thyme and drinking ditties such as Nancy Whiskey make him the archetypal stage Irishman and his act has gone down a storm with Itrish Americans for decades. Here his comic patter seemed badly off-key. Most of the rest of the

note. An afternoon concert by Voices for Peace, a children's choir drawn from both Catholic and Protestant communities, was full of hope, even if the choice of standards. such as Amazing Grace was unadventurous.

Elsewhere a workshop explained the differences between the musical traditions of Ulster and the Republic and both Makem and Davy Hammond, who shared the main bill, offered a more song-based style far removed from the familiar Celtic laments and jigs and reels. When Hammond sang The Banks of the Bann and Makem offered As I Walked Out. er connection with the ballad tradition of Scottish folk music

Yet the best moments came from Kentucky's Jean Richie, who loined them on stage. The foremost living exponent of Appalachian mountain music, her high, clear voice belied her 76 years and her repertoire illustrated how traditional Irish song has been preserved in remote American rural communities in an almost pure form. in her youth Richie learnt dozens of songs from her family of Irish-Scottish descent and first travelled to Ireland in the early 1950s to trace their origins, during which time she met the young Makem. It made for a pleasing symmetry and she seemed to represent a frail but obdurate link with a dying tradition.

undee Contemporary Arts (DCA) is set to do for Dundee what the new Guggenheim did for Bilbao. This £9 million cultural flagship is adventurous in concept and brave in design.

The building has been designed to facilitate a unique concept. Edinburgh-based Richard Murphy Architects was faced with a potentially confusing brief: to design a building which would satisfy the demands of a tripartite client, ie. the new art-led company spearheading the development (DCA), Dundee City Council and Dundee University.

While the council desired another facility to complement the Dundee Repertory Theatre and the McManus Galleries. the university - more specifi-cally. Duncan of Jordanstone College of Art and Design which, since 1996, has formed part of it -- demanded a stateof-the-art research facility, a kind of art laboratory. DCA itself wanted ample gallery space and accommodation for the back-up paraphernalia essential to any contemporary art venue.

A mere two years since the Scottish Arts Council National Lottery Fund voted the lion's share of the finance, some £5.4 million, Murphy has managed to satisfy each party. There is a fabulously equipped print workshop, an artist-inresidence flat and studio space, a large café area with exterior terraces, and two smallscale, luxury cinemas.

claimed land that forms Dundee's desolate waterfront. At the level where this reaches one of the city's principal arteries, the Nethergate, this has been extended by a new, smaller block set at an oblique angle to the old structure. At street level a severe, prow-like struc-ture projects alongside a small piazza, the entire street frontage making a dramatic interjection between a late 18th-century Lord Provost's residence and an early 19th-century Roman Catholic cathedral.

Inside, the wit and ingenuity of the design are immediateapparent. An interior avenue, off which are located an activity area and information desks, leads directly into the vast top-lit exhibition space (something rather grander than the usual white box). while a parallel staircase descends to the restaurant, visual research centre, print workshop, cinemas, and artists' fa-

activity is hidden from another, so that from the central thoroughfare you are aware of the galleries; from the galleries, the café area; from the café area, set at the juncture of the two blocks, almost everything. The larger cinema must be the only one in the country which allows you to see out. A shuttered window offers views across the Tay before and after

That this means is that in contrast to so many comparable complexes, the creative work going on is no secret activity behind closed doors. Visitors popping in for a snack enjoy feeling of being caught up in the artistic process, while artists and researchers should benefit from the feedback of public interest.

The inaugural exhibition, entitled Prime, includes virtually nothing which might be construed as dumbing down. A video of and accompanying detritus from a Joseph Beuys performance: a scattering of lifesize dead crows sculpted in bronze by Kiki Smith; an enormous wall-mounted, polished steel disc by Anish Kapoor, conceived as much in acoustic terms as in visual terms; and Tony Cragg's extraordinary clinker-constructed boat cov ered. porcupine-like, with hooks. Straight art is virtually confined to homegrown talent Callum innes's spare, latterday action painting. The director, Andrew

Nairne, admits to having included Warhol's screen-print ed "Jackies" to cajole the public with a "name". But his personal taste makes it unlikely that popular artists are going to get much of a look-in. Next in line is the former Turner Prize candidate, Ian Davenport, whose stridently coloured, poured paint on fibreboard works form his first oneman show in a public gallery. How far-reaching an impact

this pioneering institution will have on Dundee depends on the commung generosity of soonsors such as Atlantic Telecom, whose £100,000 supports an education programme for the next two years. Netherene Dunder (01382-63230)

Kitsch religious iconography, cold sadomaso-chism and flowers that unfurl like sex organs became his subjects at an early age. lowing daisy-printed duvet. Baselitz plays with the trans-parency of pattern, of a whitened surface veiling brighter layers of paint below, to shed new light on his vision of a painting behind the canvas". Where before he tried to reach this impossible image by hacking like a wood carver through layers of paint, he now opens up the surface of his works like a window. And the carelessiv sketched figures suddenly seem more like the doodles which a child might draw with a finger in the mist of a pane. Anthony d'Offay Gallery, 24 Dering St. WI (0171-499 4100)

Harold's Always Saying Goodbye is the title of Julian Schnabel's new show. What does it mean? How does it relate to the pictures? The gallery hasn't a clue. Schnabel may not have either. But perhaps this bewilderment is the best point from which to start looking at the great self-publirist's four new paintings. Oils, resin and spray paint scrawl over large, ugly-framed canvases, as though each had been applied by a different hand. Greens are applied with whipped and knotted sheets of whipped and knotted sheets of the state of the st cloth. Reds are scribbled across them like meaningless graffiti. For a moment you imagine there are muscular studies or drawings of drapery in the imprinted patterns. You search for words in the writing strokes. But inspect the canvases more closely and they dissolve into a mess. Perhaps Shrabel is taunting the viewer: if I, with my personality, do it then it's art. But if you did this, it would amount to nothing more than a scrawl. If so, then these paintings untease the boundaries between the personal and impersonality. # When murder is too foul

gruesome crimes, says Lesley O'Toole

he US Supreme Court gave Hollywood the shock of its life in March when it ruled in favour of Patsy-Ann Byers's negligence lawsuit against Oliver Stone and Time Warner Entertain-ment, Byers, a Louisiana woman, was shot and paralysed in 1995 during a holdup at the local store where she worked. Eighteen-year-old Sarah Edmondson and her boyfriend Benjamin Darrus told police they had taken drugs and embarked on a criminal spree after watching Stone's film, Natural Born Killers. Byers's law-yer. Joe Simpson, said in filing the suit: "Part of this is a crusade to clean up the movie industry."

It remains to be seen whether those with the power to approve films in Hollywood will become more cautious in the light of this unexpected decision, though the effects will not be reflected in the major American studios' output for some time.

For the moment, films inciting debate, outrage and loud moral objections continue to proliferate. Disney will release a film by the director Spike Lee this year about a 1977 killing orgy in New York's Bronx district by David Berkowitz, nicknamed Son of Sam. That the studio which recently announced it would return to its original roots and concentrate on family fare should be releasing the film is noteworthy in Itself, though Summer of Sam will be released under the company's Touchstone arm, ensuring that the name Walt Disney will not appear on its poster.

Joe Roth, the chairman of Walt Disney Studios, told The Los Angeles Times last week: "Summer of Sam is the work of a somewhat controversial artist, not an example of what the Walt Disney Company thinks is a family film."

A different, more far-reaching question was posed by The Los Angeles Times in its February review of 8mm. There are some films whose existence makes the world a worse place the newspaper's chief film critic. Kenneth Turan. His comments sparked a deluge of mail from readers who subsequently saw the film, both in support of the review and taking issue with it. A story analyst for a major film studio was the most effusive in her support for Turan's stance. "Unless more men and women like Turan have the courage to speak up and remind women — and men that they not only do not condone but are sickened by the continual treatment of women as exemplified by 8mm and all the 8mms before it, we will be forced to believe This Is The Way Men Are."

8mm stars Nicolas Cage as a private investigator who turns vigilante when asked to find out if a purported snuff film featuring the brutal mur-der of a teenage girl is real or fake. The piece of film itself is not especially graphic; the real horror, as the director Joel Schumacher asserts, is

"filled in by your mind". Cage, like Schumacher, does not see the film as a social statement on pornography. "For me, it's a social statement about what happens to your average American man who's had enough of hear-ing and seeing young people getting killed on the news. That's where I come from with it."

Schumacher says he is "cynical and angry" about the American justice system "so I seem to be taking it into my own hands". But he laughs off any suggestion that his film might inspire copycat cases. "I think that people who want to commit atrocities are just looking for an excuse. I think the people who murdered after Natural Born Killers would have found another movie. When I made Flatliners, about young medical students deciding to kill themselves to see what death was like, journalists asked me whether I was afraid college students would start trying the same thing. I would always say, 'No. I think they're smarter than you are."

Smm was far from a box-office disaster in America, nor could it be called a hit. But it won no awards. Happiness, on the other hand, Todd Solondz's follow-up to the hugely acclaimed Welcome to the Dollhouse, earned a rapturous response at the Cannes Film Festival last year and won the International Critics' Prize. Yet the company which planned to release Happiness in America, October Films, was forced to renege on its deal last year when its parent company, Universal Pictures, cited a littleused legal loophole to avoid distributing the film. Happiness was promptly picked up by the independent New York distributor, Good Machine, who released the film in America last

Solondz is anxious that the correct story be told "because October Films had always been very supportive. Universal just didn't think this movie would be appropriate for the image of the company. It wasn't worth its while to endure all the controversy and flak that it expected from this liftle movie." Universal's escape hatch is the term "morally objectionable". Should the conglomerate find any film morally objectionable, it has the right to refuse to release it.

The source of controversy stemmed from one of many storylines in Happiness: that about a paedophile who, despite having a young son of his classmates. Nothing graphic is seen in the film and many reviews in America were extremely favourable. Solondz thinks Universal exercised its option for the very reason that the film stood no chance of generating the same kind of revenue as 8mm. which earned more than $35 million at the box office. "If Universal thought the film was going to earn

ly courageous," says Solondz. "But this being Hollywood, the only morality is the bottom line. That is to say, if a movie is profitable, then it's moral." He maintains that it was not the subject-matter itself which generated attention but the fact that his paedophile is portrayed with "a kind of com-passion and humanity. I think this is the greatest shock for people." Clearly, the director does not invite easy sympathy for the character - "what he does is unequivocally unforgivable" - but rather paints him as a man who is "not a monster but struggles with the monster within and succumbs to this demon. I don't need to underestimate the intelligence of my audience. They know rape is bad; that is implicit. But I'm not interested in judging or punishing these characters as much as I'm interested in ex-

Both Solondz and Schumacher insist that nothing in either of their movies is any different from subject-matter readily available for consumption "There is a huge market for atrocity," says Schumacher. "Even your local bookstore is full of books with actual police photos of the most brutal muders. There's a film called Faces of Death which is in most video stores and shows human atrocity at its worst, it's always rented."

Solondz, employing the same black humour which pervades his films. says there's "a certain hysteria" in America about the sexual molestaevery third person on TV was abused as a child. Everyone seems to have gone through it. You almost feel like you missed out on something."

ut he is not joking in bemoaning the fact that even neonle who annear to revel in. rather than be turned off by, his film are missing the point At . a film festival last year, he was approached by a young man who told Solondz he had loved his movie. Then he said, 'I've got this joke and I think you'll love it." He proceeded to tell me the ugliest, most crass loke imaginable and then laughed and ran off. It was so depressing because for this young gentleman, watching the movie was a kind of hip, cool experience. Clearly, he didn't get what ! was getting at: otherwise he would never have told me that joke."

In love with Shakespeare's London

he property developers' flags are flying high in Bermondsey. Bucking the general trend that cities tend to move west, upwind of grime and pollution. London is moving east. With inner-city industry all but gone, speculators are filling the gaps.

On the quiet, Bermondsey has become distinctly fashionable, a natural progression in the renaissance taking place along the south bank of the Thames.

The list of reasons to visit is growing: the Tate Gallery at Bankside, Sir Norman Foster's new mayoral palace, the Bermondsey antiques market, the Design Museum. Zandra Rhodes's Fashion Museum, Conran's eateries at Butler's Wharf, the Globe Theatre, Southwark Cathedral and old-world Borough market. Soon there will be better transport - the Jubilee Line extension. And now people want to live

Historically. Bermondsey has long been a place of interest with a strong conumunity spirit. The area - now part of Southwark - is defined geographically: to the north by the Thames, to the west by London Bridge and Borough High Street, to the east by Rotherhithe and to the south by the Old Kent Road. Tower Bridge Road takes you from the City straight to its heart.

The district's history goes back to murky Saxon origins, beginning with a Lord Boermund (the 'ey' added to describe the marsh it was at

now happily undergoing a facelift. Until, 1970, Bermondsey's warehouses, which lined the riverfront from London Bridge to Rotherhithe, were the city's central depot for goods from around the world. It was its Thameside community of warehousemen, whari owners and shippers who earned Bermondsey the palatable description of the "larder" of London. Large-draught ships would arrive at Surrey Docks before smaller lighters brought the cargo further upriver for storage at Bermondsey. This all ended with containerisation, although until recently teascented streets near Tower Bridge reminded passers-by that some warehouses were still active.

But bargain-hunters looking for a warehouse conversion have missed the boat. Since the mid-Eighties the disused warehouses around Shad

Thames, with names redolent of their past such as Saffron Wharf and Java Wharf, have been transformed from pigeon-infested black holes into halogen-lit acres of wood flooring and boilerplate chic. Twobedroom apartments sell for at least £400,000, with river frontage adding an automatic £100,000 to the price. A few unconverted warehouses remain, but all are accounted for. According to Roger Smith, of the Bermondsey estate agents Michael Kalmar, it is not just the predictable City and media types who are enjoy-ing the Bermondsey warehouse life. There is a signifier and perhaps richer purchasers interested in the area."

he says. One such couple, who have bought a flat in Jacob's Island on the river. are a retired radiologist, Dr Nicholas Godiee, and his wife Barbara. They divide their time be tween Sussex and Bermondsey. "We love being near the river and Bermondsey is really very central," says Mrs Godlee. "But development is absolutely rampant around here now and we are afraid of losing our view of the Thames and Tower Mr Smith says security can be an

has now spread from the riverside deeper into the old borough, and the property price gradient is steep. A two-bedroom flat of about 700sq ft in a "new build" will cost you about £175,000. You can still find Victorian terrace cottages — those that escaped the intense wartime bombing of the area — going for £200,000.

David Campbell, a management consultant, and his fiancee have recently moved into one. He says: There is a strong sense of history in Bermondsey. It is real old London. Our 60-year-old neighbour was born in his front parlour."

The scale of building is impressive.Around every corner there are new constructions or old industrial buildings being transformed into apartment blocks or "shells" popular with design-inspired buyers.

hells are a City-fringe phe-nomenon for the wellheeled. Essentially, they are newly created empty spaces: bare walls and floors, with utility points, which the purchaser fits out with partition walls, heating systems and as much as he or she wants or can afford at the time.

The rule of thumb for shells is to add on a minimum of £30,000 to the purchase price before you can move in. A shell in a warehouse in inner Bermondsey goes for between £150,000 and £250,000.

According to Mr Smith, prices of residential property have risen by 50 per cent in the past four years. It still a rising market with purchasers flocking to new developments. Once the Jubilee Line to Greenwich is finished and the Millennium Dome pilgrims start flowing through. Bermondsey will be back on the map.

Buyers go for design

IF IT is not furnished and decorated to within an inch of its life, then forget it. Amanda Loose writes. Buyers of new developments at the top end of the housing market are increasingly interested only in properties that have been interior-

The show flat at the Bromptons, the redevelopment of the Royal Brompton Hospital in southwest London by Northacre, has sold for £1.000 per sq ft, almost double the going rate. Increasingly, develop-ers are having to recruit

She says: "If you have the chance to show a buyer a shell or a show home, nine out of ten will opt for the show home." Chesham Place, a development of 23 flats and houses on the Chesham Place Estate in Belgravia, is a case in point. Those properties that were marketed as shells sold more slowly, says Brendan Roberts at Aylesford.

Peter Wetherell, of Wetherell in Mayfair, says: "We are selling a lifestyle as opposed to real estate. No matter what you do, they tend to buy with one chequebook and will use another to rip it all out again."

Wetherell is currently selling 15 Culross Street in Mayfair. Its refurbishment has been overseen by Michael Reeves, who won the 1998 International Interior Designer of the Year award on the back of this work. The asking price is £2.95 million for a 99-year lease.

Aylesford is selling flat four at 37 Chesham Place for £4.75 million with a 999-year lease from January 1995.

Changing rooms and styles that changed our lives

carefully, a tiny window on the past may present itself. From the ceiling rose through to the central heating system, a trail of design innovations stretches back to when the property was built.

Architects have spent most of this century making bold predictions for the fate of the home in the year 2000, including glass properties, moveable houses and underground homes. But as we head towards the millennium, how many of these forecasts will be realised?

The Ideal Home Show gives visitors the chance to see some of the current ideas on the abode of the future. A centrepiece exhibit is the award-winning Pierre D'Avoine Architect's Slim House. Designed to save space, it features a single-storey terrace with communal courtyards and roof gardens. It is a far cry from the mock Tudor village shown at one of the first exhibitions in 1910, which made great play of the space available in the houses. Nothing about them

Mr Justice Jonathan Parker so held in a reserved judgment allowing appeals brought by way of case stated by the taxpayers. Mr Henry Hitch, Mr Ian Handy and Mrs Bearrice Handy, from a decision in principle by the special commissioners holding that the agree-ments on which the scheme was based were shams.

Mr Leolin Price, QC, Miss Penelope Reed and Mr John Smart for the taxpayers: Mr Phillip Vallance. OC and Miss Karen Steyn for the

MR JUSTICE JONATHAN PARKER said that the Revenue assessed the taxpavers to capital gains tax on the disposal during 1984-85 of some 463 acres of agriculpural land known as Abbey Farm. Blunsdon St Andrew, Swindon. which was beneficially owned by members of the Hitch family,

The taxpayers appealed the asessments relying on documents which came into existence as part of an avoidance scheme entered into by the family that was designed to convert capital sums rep-resenting the realisation of the development value of the land into in-come in the hands of the family, as and when received by them. The Revenue contended that the documents were of no legal effect. its primary contention being that they were shams. At one stage the Revenue had challenged the efficacy of the scheme on the basis of the decision of the House of Lords in Furniss v Dawson ([1984] AC 474) but abandoned the argument shortly before the commissioners heard the case. By agreement the commissioners had limited their decision to ruling on the Revenue's challenge to the legal effect of the documents. The commissioners found that a purported agreement dated April 16, 1994, which formed part of the jax avoidance scheme was a sham in the sense that it was "intended ... to give the appearance of creating between the parties legal rights and obligations different from the actual legal rights and obligations (if any) which the parties intend to create", per Lord Justice Diplock in Snook v London and West Riding Investments Ltd [1967] 2 QB 786.

Following that finding, the commissioners concluded that a further purported agreement dated April 17, 1984, and two recitals to a deed dated June 22, 1984, where part of the farm was acquired by

Crest Homes pic, were also shams. The commissioners criticised Mr Henry Hitch and Mr Patrick Taylor, a solicitor specialising in tax avoidance, stating that their evidence was inherently unreliable and that their dealings with the Revenue had been less than straightforward.

The commissioners found that although the evidence was largely circumstantial they were driven to the conclusion that the taxpayers did not intend by virtue of the 1984 agreement to grant a 999-year lease of the farm to a small Singa-

Having correctly directed themselves on the question of sham, per Lord Justice Diplock in Snook, it was prime facie difficult to see how the commissioners' finding of fact could be susceptible of challenge on appeal.

But it was important to appreciate that the finding was made in the face of the parties own evidence as to their own intentions and thus was based, as would almost inevitably be the case where allegations of share were made, on inference drawn from the facts.

. It was for the court to consider whether the inference which the commissioners drew as to the true intentions of the parties to the 1984 agreement was correctly drawn. on the totality of the facts found that inference could not properly be drawn, then the position would

the appeal had to succeed: see Edwards v Bairstow ([1956] AC 14).
Of the factors that led the commissioners to their decision, nei-ther the Hitch family's wish to realise the farm's development value, nor the unreliability of some of the witnesses, provided evidence of sham. Equally, the fact that the 1984 agreement was not negotiated at arms' length did no more than

set the scene for the inquiry. That the agreement was not perto its terms took the matter little furwhether it was performed at all. If and to the extent it was performed. it was difficult to maintain that it was a sham; the more so in circumstances where performance of it led to real as opposed to sham consequences affecting third parties.

It was impossible to regard the 1984 agreement as a sham. Where parties had entered into an agreement to effect a particular disposition, and that disposition was sub-sequently effected, there was no scope for an argument that the parties did not intend the agreement to have its expressed effect.

In a case involving a complex and artificial tax avoidance scheme, where the scheme ducumentation was sloppily executed, where the evidence of the taxpayer and of his legal adviser, the deviser of the scheme, was found to be unreliable, and where their dealings with the Revenue had been less than straightforward, there had to be a strong temptation for any tri-bunal to throw up its hands and cry "Sham!" But in the instant case and so long as the Spook definition. that temptation had to

Having examined the facts found and with every respect for the experienced special commisonly reasonable conclusion was in-

Any challenge to the fiscal efficacy of the scheme had to based on Furniss v Dawson. No such challenge had been mounted by the Revenue and no view would be ex-pressed as to whether if it had been would have succeeded.

Staying action before tribunal

Before Mr Justice Laddie Dudgment February 24

It was wrong for essentially the same issues to be run in two separate tribunals. Where there was a significant overlap between an application to an employment tribu-nal and an action in the High Court, with common issues permeating each dispute and an effectively agreed timetable, it was appropriate to stay the former.

Mr Justice Laddie so held in the Chancery Division, on interlocutory applications by the plaintiffs. Chorion plc, Chorion (IP) Ltd. Enid Blyton Ltd, Agatha Christie Ltd. Robert Bolt (1973) Ltd and Charles William Lane either to apply for a stay of his complaint of unfair dismissal in his employment tribunal case No 6004195/98, or to consent to an application for such a stay by the plaintiffs.

Mr Ian Geering, QC and Miss Juliet May for the plaintiffs; Mr Michael Collins, QC and Mr Mar-tin Griffiths for Mr Lane.

MR JUSTICE LADDIE said that the plaintiffs were a group concerned, inter alia, with the exploitation of intellectual property rights.

His Lordship had considerable sympathy for Afr Lane's view that the timetable proposed by the plain-tiffs for the tribunal hearing was too ught for him adequately to defend himself: speedy litigation was likely to be cheaper than slow, but there came a point when speed could give rise to injustice.

His Lordship would order the plainuffs' amended statement of claim to be served by March, adopt Mr Collins' timetable as the fastest that could be imposed while doing justice to Mr Lane, and order an expedited trial in the High Court to come on not before July 1, with an estimated duration of five days.

That left only one issue: should the court make an order effectively forcing Mr Lane to hold back on his application to the employment

His Lordship would proceed on the basis that, as at present formu-lated, the same questions of breach of fiduciary duty and breach of confidence would form part, but not the whole, of the matters to be de-termined in the inbunal and would form a major part of the High Court action.

ing Mareva injunction restraining Mr Hadkinson from dealing with or disposing of his assets. Some two weeks after the Mareva was granted and served, he transferred approximately £4.25 million from his bank account in Jersey to his wife, who deposlied the money into an account in Switzerland. On December 2, 1998, Mr Justice Rance granted a Mareva injunction against Mrs Hadkinson. Paragraph 2 of the order required her to provide certain information within 24 hours of service and serve a confirmatory affidavit within seven days.

On December 5, 1998 she swore an affidavit which purported to provide the information required by paragraph 2 of the order. She that she did not know what had happened to the funds transferred to her account but that to the t of her knowledge they were still in her account.

The applicant's solicitors considered that the answers were wholly adequate and that Mrs Hadkinson had failed to take all steps which she ought reasonably to have taken to obtain and provide the necessary information required by the order. Accordingly, the applicant against her.

ed a fuller affidavit and in those circumstances the applicant decided not to proceed with the motion to commit but contended that he should have his costs on an indemnity basis.

His Lordship said that the case raised a question of principle; where an order such as the familiar disclosure order in a Mareva injunction required the respondent that they give an honest answer or did they have to do more than merely provide an answer to sausfy the terms of the injunction?

In his Lordship's judgment the order carried with it an obligation to do more than merely tell the truth. If the respondent gave a truthful but inaccurate answer. without taking reasonable steps to investigate the truth or otherwise of the answer, then that was con-

In the instant case, Mrs Hadkinson had not given an accurate answer to the questions in the order and acted in an unreasonably dilatory manner. Second, his Lordship said that he had to consider the mental element required for contempt on which there was conflict between the Court of Appeal in Irtelil v Squatriti and Others [1993] QB 83) and the House of Lords in Director General of Fair Trading v Pioneer Concrete (UK) and Another (1995) 1 AC 456). In Irrelli Lord Justice Farquharson said (at p90) that it was inappropriate to find contempt unless: the evidence establishes beyond reasonable doubt that jthe respondent] did intend to act in contempt of the court's authority".

The decision in Irtelli was a decision of a strong Court of Appeal and would ordinarily be binding. however, his Lordship was saus fied that he should not follow it.

The House of Lords decision in Pioneer was more consistent with the previous line of authority. Moreover, Irtelli suffered from two problems.

First, the previous line of authority was not cited and second, the deneer, which was subsequently reversed by the House of Lords, appeared to have been cited in skele ton arguments, which might ex-plain the observations of Lord Justice Farquharson.
Accordingly, his Lordship said that he was not only free, but House of Lords in Pioneer. Solicitors: Stephenson Har-wood; Wragge & Co, Birmingham.

Woodward waits for Guscott to prove fitness

By David Hands, Rugby Correspondent

ENGLAND know the enemy that stands between them and a grand slam with which to conclude the millennium. Now all they have to do is determine their own composition for the final match of the final Five Nations Champion-ship, against Wales at Wernbley on Sunday, and their medical team could have the final say in selection.

Clive Woodward, the England coach, will have expected the unchanged Wales XV that was named yesterday, II much the same time as his own squad of 25 was announced, from which three will be dropped today. Whereas Graham Henry, the Wales coach, admitted that he took only five seconds to select his starting line-up. Woodward must await reports on Jeremy Guscott's hamstring before settling on his three-

Guscott's frame of mind will not be helped by the court appearance that awaits him later this month after an alleged road-rage incident. If the Bath centre makes his sixueth England appearance this weekend, then Woodward can ponder whether to recall Tony Underwood to the right wing in place of the injured David Rees or to throw in Steve Hanley, the Sale teenager. who has enjoyed a meteoric rise in his first season of firstclass rugby.

Underwood has started games this season against Australia and South Africa. and represents the safe option. This was not always Woodward's modus operandi as a player, nor has it been his hallmark as a selector. He watched Hanley play an important role in Sale's win over London Irish at the weekend and will not be worried at his youth or his inexperience.

If, however, he has to replace Guscott in midfield, his thinking may change. The only other centre in the squad is Barrie-Jon Mather, who is not first-choice at Sale these days, and other midfield options include moving either Matt Perry or Nick Beal from full back. Both played in the centre during the southern hemisphere tour last summer. though neither would wish to repeat the experience.

With Matt Dawson at scrum half for Kyran Bracken. Woodward lost no time in recalling Austin Healey to England duty. The Leicester scrum half ends an eight-week suspension on Saturday, sus-tained after a stamping inci-dent with Kevin Putt, of London Irish, and with Scott Benton carrying a leg injury, there are precious few alternatives to Healey, despite his lack of match practice. There is, too, a recall for Ben Clarke, who has spent the new year in the Eng-land A side and will be happy to make a return to the senior squad, which he did so much to boost on tour last year.

No such uncertainty clouds Henry's mind, "We would like to have had Allan Bateman in the 22, but we have been able to restore David Young and Andrew Lewis. who have played a lot of Test matches," he said. Henry seeks experience as a prime requisite, but also stability, hence his pleas-ure at selecting the same XV that beat Italy 60-21 and 14 of those who succeeded in France

Young and Lewis, the Cardiff props, displace Darren Morris and Geraint Lewis because Henry believes he may need to change his entire front row at some stage against the powerful England tight five. We have to improve in most areas," Henry said. "We need stability at first phase, to retain the ball in the tackle area, which we haven't always done consistently, to play the game in a positive frame of mind, to concentrate on the total package."

In fact, Henry's shopping list of requirements for his players is as long as his arm, but he has been enthused by the quality he has seen at junior level in recent weeks, in his under-19 and under-21 squads. where success has made the future seem brighter, win or lose at Wembley. There can be no greater carrot for Wales, as Robert Howley, the captain, acknowledged, than to deny England a grand slam.

We will enjoy our last international at Wembley and we will try to give England a game," Howley said. "We can't afford to give them territory or possession, we will have to sort that out if we are to compete." So much humility has been coming out of Wales frequency of maximums is, missing. Power play: a jubilant Dott celebrates his 147 break against David Roe yesterday

Dott's perfect finish has the maximum effect

GRAEME DOTT underlined the unparalleled break-building standards being set by the top players when he made a maximum break to reach the second round of the British Open at Plymouth yesterday.

Dott. the world No 30, compiled the 147 in the penultimate frame of his 5-4 victory over David Roe. It was the 29th perfect run in profession-al competition and the seventh this season, two more than the previous record, set in 1991-92.

It was also the second in this tournament — Jason Prince made one in the final qualifying round at Blackpool in January - the fifth this year and the seventeenth in world ranking events. The ue them as an achievement.

Even so, Dott was delighted, despite having sur-rendered an ideal position on numerous occasions. He collected £5,000 and received the keys to a Vauxhail Vectra.

Towards the end of the frame. Dott was forced to judge several difficult pots, most notably the brown. which he clipped thin to a baulk pocket while employing the rest. A long blue followed. and even the black off its spot was by no means a formality.

"Every shot on the colours was missable so in some respects that took a lot of pressure off me." Dott said. There's no way I could've been too disappointed about missing. I never thought I'd disappeared."

Dott, a diminutive 21-yearold from Glasgow, advances to play Stephen Hendry in a repeat of the Scottish Open final in February when the six-times world champion, who has recorded five maximums in competition, won 9-L

The confidence generated by that result, and Hendry's subsequent capture of the Benson and Hedges Irish Masters title, was evident during his 5-0 whitewash of Jon Birch. Hendry, who had breaks of 136 and 109, was detained for only 76 minutes. Jimmy White, desperate for all the ranking points he can muster in his fight to regain entry to the world's top 16 pext season, rallied from 43 down to edge out Joe Swail 5-4 and

RUGBY LEAGUE

Easter schedule upsets coaches

By CHRISTOPHER IRVINE

WHILE Super League Europe (SLE) officials were congratu-lating themselves on increased crowds over Easter, several coaches were outraged by the physical price of playing two JJB Super League games in four or five days.

The aggregate attendance figure for the holiday fixtures is set to exceed 100,000 when Huddersfield Giants and Castleford Tigers meet at the McAlpine Stadium tonight. The 15,000 crowd at St Helens on Monday was the biggest at Knowsley Road since the team won the 1996 Super League title. In addition, there were 16,000 attendances at Wigan and Bradford, which are seen by SLE as justifying the reintroduction of two Easter fixtures in an expanded

30-match league programme. However, it was noticeable in most cases on Monday that matches lacked the intensity of those last Thursday and Friday because players were tired and more vulnerable to injury. A patched-up London Broncos must play their fourth match in less than a fortnight at home against St Helens, the league leaders, on Friday.

Dan Stains, the London coach, gave warning after the defeat away at Leeds on Monday that playing standards would suffer. After an typically limp and bloodless encounter, Graham Murray, the Leeds coach, said: "Our match against Bradford on the Thursday was about quality, not the lackhistre follow-up, which you get because players can-not recover properly in time."

in his charge.

Reilly is dismayed that warnings he made before he left for Australia about player development have not been heeded. The infrastructure is very ordinary. We just haven't got anywhere near the depth that the Australian developwill now meet John Parrott in ment programme has," he France, in a repeat of the said.

Leicester Riders to look for new coach

BASKETBALL DAVE Harris. 38, has paid the price for presiding over Leicester Riders' lowest finish in the Budweiser League. The coach is not having his contract renewed for a second season although the club did end their campaign on a high note last Saturday by beating Derby Storm, coached by Harris's predecessor, Bob Donewald. Leicester still finished one off the bottom, in twelfth place.

he was as disappointed as anyone with the way the results went," Kevin Routledge, the Leiceste chairman, said yesterday, BOWLS: The absence of Amy Gowshall, the national champion of champions title-holder, who is only 20 from the England women's junior side announced yesterday suggests that she has been pencilled in for a place in the senior side. #### By ROBERT SHEEHAN, BRIDGE CORRESPONDENT

Cardinal Morton was one of Henry VII's prime revenue collectors. He would visit the homes of the wealthy, and if they made him at home with lavish expenditure, he would infer that they had plenty of money and could thus contribute to the king. Thrifty hospitality would, of course, imply that they had saved up their funds – and would thus also be able to make a generous donation to the royal exchequer. What has this to do with bridge? Well, consider the following hand.

This hand from the qualifying round of the Dutch Forbo Tournament saw both tables reach Four Hearts. In one room the Dutch declarer as North pitched a club from dummy on the diamond lead, after which the contract could no longer be made. The loss of a spade, a club and two trumps was unavoidable.

At the other table Willem Gosschalk as South became declarer after the auction shown above, where the jump to Three Hearts as a passed hand showed 5-5 distribution and invitational values. He showed the right way to play the hand. West kicked off with two top

ATHLETICS

Return to colours for Coe

By DAVID POWELL ATHLETICS CORRESPONDENT

BRITISH athletics is run by former athletes but, for all the medals today's men in suits won when they were heroes in tracksuits, none has the display of badges to match the latest recruit. Sebastian Coe. double Olympic 1.500 metres champion and multiple world record-breaker, returned to the sport yesterday as chairman of events for the company that promotes track meetings in Britain. Nine years after retiring from competitive running. Coe has taken on a lead role with Fast Track, whose head is Alan Pascoe, the 1974 European and Commonwealth 400

David Hemery, the 1968 Olympic 400 metres hurdles champion, is president of UK Athletics and its chief executive is David Moorcroft, a double Commonwealth Games middle-distance champion. Brendan Foster, the 1974 Euro-pean 5,000 metres champion. is head of Nova International, which puts on most of Britain's televised road races.

One of the few Foster cannot claim is the London Marathon but David Bedford, the former 10.000 metres world recordholder, can. He is head of marketing. Coe, however, is the only one to have been personal trainer to the Leader of the Opposition.

Adding to his duties as William Hague's chief of staff, Coe became his lifestyle coach. Now the former Conservative MP for Falmouth and Camborne, who lost his seat at the last election, is ready to take up an advisory role with Fast Track. He will continue his work at Westminster.

Coe's name will lend weight to Britain's bid to host the 2003 world championships. British athletics has been rocked by drugs scandals, bankruptcy and poor attendances of late. but the scales have been balanced by the success of the athletes. "There is a lot to shout about but also a lot to get right." Coe said.

Bradley keeps dream alive

BY ALAN LEE, RACING CORRESPONDENT

National week supplies human drama exhausting in its quantity and emotion but the ;W. COgli hattle confronting Graham Bradley is compelling even by SKETSALL Des Aintree standards. Bradley is striving to preserve one final career dream as a jockey in the week when his other concern is the preservation of his liberty. Last night, against heavy odds, he was refusing to accept the dream is dead.

This was always going to be a poignant National for Bradley, not only because he has never won the race, nor that he was such a gallant runner-up a year ago, nor even because. at 38, time is so short. For this Yorkshireman of roguish hu-mour and undimmed enthusiasm, there was another matter to concentrate the mind.

Three days after the race, Bradley must report back to Charing Cross police station, from where he has been freed on bail since his arrest in early January by a force investigating alleged doping and race-lixing. It promised to be a demanding week, even before his prized ride on Suny Bay was so abruptly jeopardised. in the agonised hours after his fall from Rightsaidfred in

BY ANNUAL ritual, Grand the Irish Grand National on Monday, Bradley was reconciled to the worst. "I thought I'd smashed my shoulder to smithereens," he reflected yesterday, "I was in so much pain I thought there was no chance of riding at Aintree."

> Today in Interface: How to bet on the Grand National via the Internet

has returned. After resting his wounds in Dublin overnight, Bradley flew home yesterday for an immediate appointment with 'Rabbit' Slattery, the physiotherapist who spends much of her life tending to the ravages of a jockey's singular exist-ence. She gave him better news than he had dared to

"All I have done is sprung a joint between the collarbone and shoulder." Bradley explained with the blitheness of a man reporting a grazed knee. "I haven't done it badly, either, which is amazing as the first thoughts in Ireland were that I had broken the collarbone and dislocated the shoulder. I've done neither and I honestly think I'm going to make it

"I ve been told I must give it complete rest tomorrow, then I shall have some physic on Thursday and plan to ride out on Friday morning. If I'm on target. I will then ride one horse at Liverpool that afternoon — I must do that to prove my fitness to the owner and trainer, and most of all to

The Grand National remains the nagging omission in Bradley's career and Suny Bay, second in the last two runnings, is primed to provide the fairytale. "It is every jockey's dream and I won't get a better chance now. Time is running out for me and although I've got no wish to pack up yet, this ride means an awful lot."

Observing events with interest yesterday was Charlie Brooks, who trained Suny Bay until his retirement last summer and who must accompany Bradley to answer his own bail in the same inquiry next Tuesday. Brooks admits he will have mixed feelings on Saturday but he said: "I just feel it would be a major blow to the horse's chance if 'Brad'

For Simon Sherwood, who succeeded Brooks at the Uplands yard in Lambourn, jockey uncertainty is an unwanted complication. Yesterday, though, he coolly put himself in Bradley's hands. "I thought he would be very unlikely to ride after a fall like that but Sherwood for the Manchester while there is a possibility I will give him time," he said.

"I could do without all this but I'm prepared to sit on the fence until Friday, Naturally, I'm looking around at who else is available and I will have someone on standby. My phone has been ringing all

strong candidate, along with Jason Titley and Warren Marston. There may be others, if intended runners are pulled out." Yankie Lord, trained by United manager, Alex Fergu-son, was second at Uttoxeter vesterday with Tony McCoy deputising for Bradley. Mc-Coy, however, is committed to a fancied National runner in Eudipe, one of a battation heading for Aintree to represent the champion owner, David Johnson, whose title is un-der heavy threat from J. P. Mc-Manus.

while the highlight of tomor-row will be the Martell Cup, in which Tony Dobbin expects to be fit to ride Go Ballistic despite sustaining heavy bruis-ing to ribs and shoulder on Monday. Jump jockeys are a staggeringly stoical bunch. The going at Aintree is described as soft and good to soft in places on the Grand National course. Spokesman Jan Renton believes there will be some give, although only light rain is forecast between now

Offending players face stiffer penalties

BY RUSSELL KEMPSON

PLAYERS could be fined heavily for disciplinary offences next season under a new scheme proposed by the Professional Footballers' Association (PFA). If the system is given the go-ahead during the summer, persistent offenders might lose a week's wages should they fail to improve their behaviour. their behaviour.

The move follows a meeting of professional football's Negotiation and Consultative Committee, which is made up of representatives from the PFA, the Football League, the Football Association and the FA Premier League. It has been concerned by the mounting lack of discipline throughout the divisions and the need to hit players where it hurts - in their pay packets.

Under the new rules, a pro-portion of their wages will be docked after they have collected eight bookings. More seri-ous penalties could be imposed for those who are sent off, with fines of 50 per cent of their weekly wages for a first red card, possibly rising to 75 per cent and 100 per cent for subsequent dismissals.

Players sent off for violent conduct and similar offences that warrant a three-match suspension would lose a week's wages. The maximum penalty would be two weeks' - the same level at which players can be punished at the moment

Gordon Taylor, the PFA chief executive, said yesterday: "We have a responsibility to clean up the game. Players are reluctant to be fined, particularly when they are only doing their job, and my concern is for offences that are not intended fouls at all but simply misjudgment of tackles.

Dennis Wise, the Chelsea captain, would not have fared well had the new system been in operation this season. He has been sent off four times and missed 14 marches because of suspension. The bank balance of Mark Hughes, the Wales and Southampton mid-field player, would also have suffered. He has received 15 cautions and twice been fined £2,000, for reaching 11 and 14

bookings. The FA Premier League and Football League have used different disciplinary measures in recent seasons. Two years ago, it was the traditional totting-up procedure, whereby players received one to four points per caution and were punished when they reached totals of 21. 33 and 45.

Last year, players were penalised when they had picked up five, eight and 11 bookings. If they managed to play five full matches without being cautioned, their last yel-low card would be expunged. However, this was discarded last summer. This season, players face suspension when they reach five and eight cautions. Should they get to 11 and 14, they have to appear before an FA commission and can be suspended and/or fined.

We have an agreement in principle, but no percentages have been agreed on," Chris Hull, a Football League spokesman, said yesterday. The minutiae needs to ratified at another meeting in the next three months."

Taylor's main concern is making the fines fair for players in the FA Carling Premier ship and those in the lower divisions, whose earnings differ vastly. "We are trying to be even-handed," he said. "Some club chairmen want to pay players nothing when they are

Venglos decides to remain at Celtic

JOZEF VENGLOS yesterday ended speculation about his future at Celtic by saying that he planned to stay on as coach of the Scottish champions next season.

However, Vengios, who coached Czechoslovakia to the quarter-finals of the 1990 World Cup in Italy, is expected to take on a role as a technical advisor in the long term, once a successor has been found.

"Celtic has every confidence in Jozef Venglos and greatly appreciates his valuable contribution to the club," Allan MacDonald, the acting Celtic chief executive, said in a decision to remain as head coach for next season and to build upon his good efforts to date. He has also pledged himself to work with the new management team to help identify and transfer responsibilities to his successor as seamlessly as possible.

Ferguson to the test before semi-final

By GEORGE CAULKIN

AFTER more than three months of claim, counterclaim, innuendo and rumour, Duncan Ferguson will make his comeback for Newcastle United tonight as Roud Gullit contemplates one of the biggest gambles of his managerial career.

Whitley Bay, of the Unibond League, will provide the opposition at the Newcastle train-ing ground for a closed-doors match that should determine the Scottish striker's level of involvement in the FA Cup semifinal against Tottenham Holspur on Sunday. Steve Howey, another recent absentee, will

Ferguson's inclusion is the more startling, however, given that Gullit's £8 million signing has played no competitive football since being substituted in Newcastle's 4-2 defeat at Liverpool last December. A groin injury has restricted Ferguson to just five first-team starts after his surprise transfer from Everton the previous month. His recuperation has not been helped by a series of niggling, though unrelated, set-backs. Due to play in a reserve game against York City last week, he broke down in training, raising the suggestion that his season could be over. Guilit has now to decide whether the aerial prowess that Ferguson can offer is worth the obvious risk posed by his suspect fitness. A place on the bench at Old Trafford is the likely outcome.

The prospect of Gullit fielding neither of his favoured forwards - as he was forced to do for the 1-1 draw with Totten-ham at St James' Park on Monday - has receded. Alan Shearer, the Newcastle and England captain, has recovered from an ankle injury, saying last night "I'll be OK for Sunday."

mari serias er

Dietmar Hamann, the Germany midfield player, is also nearing full fitness, while Howey, the defensive linchpin of his side, trained with his team-mates yesterday for the first time since damaging his calf against Nottingham Forest last month. Only Stephen Glass is definitely unavailable for selection; he will undergo a knee operation tomorrow.

FOOTBALL IN BRIEF

FOUR FA Carling Premiership clubs could be forced to release their Norway international players later this month. Norway have a European championship qualifying match against Georgia on April 28. Nils Johan Semb, the manager, said vesterday that he will invoke a ruling by Uefa, the European governing body, which states hat players cannot be included in club matches in a ive-day period leading up to nternationals. Mancheste United, Chelsea, Leeds United and Sheffield Wednesday are all affected as they have fixtures scheduled for Sunday, April 25.

Sepp Blatter, the president of Fifa, the world governing body, yesterday ordered referees at the world youth championship in Nigeria to take action to stop players who feign injury. Blatter made his comments at a press conference in Lagos after being asked what he thought of the behaviour of the Brazil players during their 2-0 group F defeat against Spain in Calabar.

Players should know that they play on grass and not on water," Blatter said. Referees must give a yellow card for each incident of feigning injury, but at the moment they are not doing this. When players are taken off on a stretcher they appear to be dying, but when their feet touch African soil they suddenly become fit again. he added. # Langer's century puts pressure on West Indies

FROM PAT GIBSON IN ANTIGUA

VIV RICHARDS - or Sir Vivian, as we must call him these days - has agreed to bring his considerable presence to bear on West Indies in the forthcoming seven one-day internationals against Australia and the World Cup in England in May

His involvement, by the invitation of Pat Rousseau, the president of the West Indies Cricket Board, reflects the continuing concern about their batting, which could not have been facing a more severe examination yesterday as Australia pushed for the victory in the final Test that would level the series and retain their hold on the Frank Worrell Trophy.

It follows Richards's contribution to West Indies' famous victory in Barbados, whe Brian Lara revealed that his frequent visits to the dressingroom had helped to motivate him and his team. They reached a victory target of 308 with one wicket to spare.

They have even more to do this time. Australia, who were already 290 runs ahead when they began the fourth day on 209 for two, eventually challenged them to score 388 to win — or bat through 4½ sessions to draw and thereby regain the trophy - on the back of a century from Justin Langer, achieved in the face of a magnificent spell of bowling with the old ball by the indomitable Curtly Ambrose.

There have been times in this series when Ambrose has appeared to be coming to the end of the road after more taking only II wickets in the first three Tests, he has come back into his own on his home ground. He took five for 94 in Australia's first innings and yesterday claimed the important wickets of the Waugh twins in an exemplary spell of two wickets for nine runs in ten overs, six of them maidens.

Ambrose, 35, has been written off before, but he has always insisted that only he will know when to quit and he looked as though he could go on for some time yet as he confounded Mark Waugh. who had scored 65 in a third-wicket partnership of 147 with Langer, and then Steve in successive overs.

Not even Ambrose could deny Langer his century, however. He shrugged off the Ambrose when he was in the 90s to complete his third Test century in exactly 5½ hours, off 252 balls. He hit a six and seven fours.

Langer is yet another of those overseas players who readily admit that they have benefited from playing county cricket. Indeed, the 1,448 runs that he scored for Middlesex last season, at an average of 62.95, had much to do with his recall to the Australia team for the tour of Pakistan last year.

He scored his first Test hundred in Peshawar, when Mark Taylor was making his monumental 334 not out, went on to make an unbeaten 179 against England in Adelaide and now produced his best incaptain needed it most.

Steve Waugh was still haunted by what happened in Barbados and Australia's progress was painfully slow, particularly after Hooper had pitched one of his off breaks outside Langer's leg stump and turned it so much that it hit the off.

That was an encouragin sign for Australia, but still they fretted over whether they had enough, scoring only 65 runs in 33 overs before funch and then losing their last five fell to Courtney Walsh, giving him 26 in the series and taking him to within II wickets of Kapil Dev's Test record of 434.

Stewart seeks end to England losing sequence

FROM RICHARD HORSON IN SHARIAH

EVEN with a new electronic score board and an elegantly-shaped roof capping one of the stands, it requires a vivid imagination to mistake the CBFS Stadium in Shariah for Lord's. Yet it is here, in temperatures approaching 37C and on pitches without a tinge of green, that the countdown to the World Cup begins for England today.

Alec Stewart, the captain, was merely being honest when he said there was little that the selectors can learn from the Coca-Cola Cup over the next formight that might after the thinking for the tournament proper. which begins against Sri Lanka in London NWS on May 14.

After losing six of the past seven one-day internationals at the end of the Australia tour, however, the importance of linking a few victories together should not be underestimated. If they can repeat the performances of 17 months ago, when a different England side, led by Adam Hollioake, beat India, Pakistan and West Indies, then the World Cup can be undertaken with more optimism.

The squad for the last visit here, in 1997, comprised of players equipped specifically for the conditions, but the stalwart county all-rounders have been replaced since by specialists the likes of Angus Fraser and Ian Austin who should come into their own in seaming conditions in England. The group who won in Sharjah strug-fixture at important golf events in the United States and at the major championships for the most moving sights of the 1997 Masters, when Tiger, his son, won the first major championship in which he competed as a professional, was the sight of them embracing emotionally by the side of the 18th green after Tiger had won by 12 strokes and set a new 72-hole total.

However, the Masters this week will be the last major championship that Earl will be able to attend for some time. Next Monday, he will begin radiation treatment for prostate cancer. As a result, he will miss the Open Championship at Carnoustie in July and, probably, the US Open at Pinehurst in June.

Though David Duval has eclipsed his compatriot these past six months and recently replaced him at the top of the world rankings, Tiger Woods remains the biggest name in golf, the biggest earner, a young man with a huge following around the world. This has come about as a result of a strategy that Earl and Tida Woods developed for their only son before the prodigy was born. They decided that Tiger would always come first in their relationship and set about planning and executing their predetermined aims.

The lengths to which they went were extraordinary. For example, Earl Woods has revealed how he would stand over Tiger's cot and talk gently to his new-born son while stroking his cheek. Earl Woods, a lover of jazz, made sure that music from the local station was playing on the radio when Tiger was brought home from the hospital. "Jazz is so creative, so meiodic," Woods said. "I wanted Tiger to hear it straightaway." Yet as vital a part of successful parenting as bringing up the child is saying goodbye to that child and Woods has been doing that some time now. "I am satisfied and pleased with what I have done for Tiger." Earl Woods said, "but I am moving into the background more and more. I attend fewer tournaments now and Tiger and I only talk on the telephone once every two or three weeks. I have told him 'live your life, it is yours not mine. He is growing up right in front of our faces. In 24 years, he has gone from being

Woods admitted that Duvai was probably playing better golf than his son at the moment, but said that did not make Duval the best golfer in the world. FROM JOHN HOPKINS, GOLF CORRESPONDENT

FOR Tiger Woods and Lee Westwood, two young men with the world at their feet, the 63rd Masters is the chance for them to take a big step forward. Woods is determined to demonstrate that the desire to win a second green jacket and second major championship is enough to draw from him a op-drawer performance

The sub-text for Woods is that such a performance will enable him to regain his ranking as the world No I from David Duval, Woods denies being put out by Duval's rise. but he cannot be happy about being asked at every turn whether he acknowledges Duval to be the better player. What Woods said yesterday. when he was asked for the umpteenth time, was: "He is certainly playing better."

Woods said he has played well for some months without having the exceptional sparkle that has marked Duval's golf. He believes his game is much steadier than it used to be. "My bad rounds now are 69s and 70s: they used to be 78s and 79s." He particularly praised his putting, which is so important at Augusta. In the West Coast tournaments before Augusta, where Woods finished first, second and third in three of the five events, he did not three-putt once. Westwood expects to show on his third appearance at Augusta not only that he is comfortable on the course, but that he has judged his prepara-tions to perfection. Westwood has made a slow start to the year after his marriage in January. He has played only 14 competitive rounds, and al-though he finished fifth at the Players Championship, one place better than in 1998, he then went off for a week's holiday whereas last year he moved on to New Orleans and won his first tournament in the United States.

There is a fear. in other words, that Westwood may be undertrained here. It is not a charge with which he agrees. The last thing you want to do is to come into a major with a lot of hype surrounding you. so having the week off is the best thing to do," Westwood said. "I am playing as well as [ did at this time last year."

Four legs good, two legs also pretty good

vationists now seem to subscribe to the Orwellian dictum, "Four legs good, two Peter Stringfellow, too, even though his hairstyle indicates that he is trying desperately to metamorphose into an Afghan hound.

Millions of pounds are raised every year to safeguard endangered species and pillaged rainforests. But we have become so attuned to the idea that nature conservation is about saving forests and jungles and animals from man's predatory behaviour that it comes as a joit when someone like Charles Lane comes along 10 shake some sense into us -- not by preaching "Four legs good, two legs better," but just by reminding us that for nature conservation to have any hope of working we would do wen to approach would do wen to approach setually, "Four legs good, two legs

Conservation (BBC2) was a chilling story, unhysterically told. Lane, who has worked in legs bad" - and that curse goes for . Tanzania for more than ten years as an agriculturalist and social scientist, understands why people want to protect endangered wildlife: he understands because he wants to protect it, too.

But Lane thinks that many of us who feel good because we have contributed to, say, saving the rhino, might not feel quite so good if we knew that many conservation programmes are executed at the expense of those indigenous people who once lived on the land now being fenced off as wildlife preserves. These are local residents who have lived alongside these elephants and rhinos for centuries and who are often those responsible for preserving the African landscape in a state fit for safari tourists. Lane led us to the Ngorongoro-Conservation Area, Tanzania's is full of wildlife. It is also home to 50,000 indigenous, mostly Masai, residents. But "today," said Lane, "the Masai are told to leave lands they regard as their own. They signed an agreement with the British colonial Governor in 1958 to vacate what is now the nearby Serengeti National Park for rights of habitation in perpetuity in what is now called Ngorongoro Conservation Area. However this promise has been broken."

aitetoe Monjor, an elderly Masai, can recall the day. 25 years ago, when his village was evided from the vast former crater floor in Ngorongoro where they reared cattle and grew crops. The army arrived in the morning with torches and woke everybody up. They beat the children and forced everybody out of their homes and drove them up the crater wall. Any man that resisted was put in jail. Some cattle got lost and went back, and they were eaten by lions, hyenas, etc. Some of the women who were near term aborted. The people were just shoved up here and left with no shelter, no protection or anything from the elements." Doesn't sound all that dissimilar to what Milosevic gets up to, does it?

Lane believes that population pressures and poverty will eventually overthrow this approach to conservation: "We have to look at something more just, much more complex to ensure that Nature's bounty here is preserved for posterity and local people have a future."

Similar suffering is being inflicted on dispossessed indigenous peoples in other countries and on other continents. Passionate but not pushy. Lane would make a good presenter for a series investigating similar tensions elsewhere - not instead of David Attenborough's wonderful wildlife films, but alongside them.

In Chasing The Tiger (BBCI), Julian Pettiler also showed that if tigers are now threatened with extinction, it is not because of the indigenous people who have shared the tiger's habitat for centuries. Blame, instead, the poachers and traders servicing the Chinese medicine market for tiger products, which supposedly make you strong and brave.

a particularly disheartening contempt for environmental legislation. In one Tokyo shop, our man with a hidden camera is offered more than just tiger bones: "This is tiger's penis. It's a bit off-colour, though", which was forgivable under the circumstances - the circumstances being that it had been detached from its owner and placed in a cellophane bag. "You steep it in white liquor for about three to six months and then you drink the liquid." If you're willing to drink that, then frankly you're probably as brave as you'll ever need to be on this earth.

I voical of Japan's pitiful unconcern for wildlife was a scene from a Japanese TV game show in which three Japanese celebrities were taken to a Shanghai restaurant and asked to identify exotic dishes. Could this one be turde? Or badger? No, it's tiger, actually. A Bengal tiger was then led into the restaurant. Instead of throwing up in disgust, the three female celebrities faked panic in a cutesy, girly, game-show way. The only thing in this scene which looked the least bit dignified was the riger.

When Stephen Tompkinson reached Bangkok in Great Railway Journeys (BBC2), he made a traditional gesture at a market stall of paying to release a caged bird - a popular Zen form of earning celestial credits. "It's a nice idea," said Tompkinson, who makes a jolly travelling companion providing you can stop him breaking into song. "even if the birds are caught and caged specially to be sold to the likes of me."

This is a near form of recycling. but I'm not sure it's quite what Charles Lane had in mind when he advocated getting the local people personally and financially involved in caring for wildlife.

Juventus earn Ferguson's respect before European Cup semi-final

United prepare to settle score

THOMAS HEARNS and the players of Juventus arrived in Manchester yesterday from the different worlds of Detroit and Turin. They had one thing in common. Both found themselves in the unfamiliar position of being consigned to the undercard.

One has come to support a Prince, the others to try to break the hearts of the men who would sacrifice everything else to be kings of Europe. They may be in decline, but that is why they are so dangerous. In their own fields, they are still hit-men, still deadly if underestimated.

As their powers fade, Juventus have made a speciality of striking just when their oppo-nents thought that they had breathed their last. Time and again, they seem to survive against the odds, qualifying by squeezing through the narrow est of mathematical loopholes. edging through with implausibly late equalisers.

They managed to finish top of group B in the league stages of this season's European Cup, even though they only won one match - and that was their last. In the quarter-finais, they were on the brink of elimination to Olympiakos in Greece when Antonio Conte scored minutes from the end to send them through by the narrowest of margins.

No wonder Alex Ferguson, Manchester manager, looked grave and earnest yesterday. He knows Juventus well, respects them above all other European sides for their pedigree, their consistency and for the fact that they are on the verge of appearing in their fourth successive European Cup final. bility and the fact that they are adrift in mid-table in Serie A, there lurks something grizzly and hard-bitten at the heart of Juventus, an instinct for knowing how to avoid defeat that cannot be beaten out of them. Thus, while Ferguson was, quite rightly, optimistic about his team's chances of making a good start by beating them in the first leg of their Europe-an Cup semi-final at Old

Trafford tonight, his words exuded caution and respect.

There were no jokes about Italian duplicity this time, no no mind games about diving and scheming, as there had been in the run-up to the matches against Internazionale last month. This time, it's

This time, too, United are ready; sure that they have no reason to feel overawed against the side that has become their measuring stick. If they beat Juventus, the team has exposed their deficiencies so brutally in the past, they will feel that neither Bayern Munich nor Dynamo Kiev will hold any terrors for petition two years ago, United played the timid first formers to the Juventus version of Gripper, the school bully. Now, fithave got the wherewithal to strike back.

Ryan Giggs will take his place on the left wing and Jaap Stam his in the centre of defence. The only real doubt surrounds the choice of Henning Berg or Ronny Johnsen to partner the Dutchman.

When they met in this com-ter, meaner, stronger and more experienced, United It appears that they have a full squad to choose from, that "If we have a good start to the game, if we settle into it well, I think we have a fabulous chance," Ferguson said. 'It is never easy in semi-finals. You can make them easy or hard. We hope that the experience we have gathered so we won't be disappointing anyone.

They will be thinking about what I am going to do with my team and I have given my selection a lot of thought. Hopefully, I have got not had the reputation of being defensively technical and I don't think we are particularly good at that, but you can make sure that you have the right type of players in the right areas of the field that can match their best players.

"I don't think you can underestimate the value of their experience. They know how not to lose games. They have got the experience not to lose their heads. They have scored two or three late goals in this competition this season, but it is not necessarily a good situation to be in. Sometimes, it runs out for you. Sometimes, even experience can't get you

Ferguson brushed aside man's fitness, wary of becoming embroiled in another spat about gamesmanship, determined to offer nothing but respect even when an Italian journalist invited him to repeat his opinions about their Machiavellian tendencies.

You get so serious about these things," Ferguson said.
"It was just a bit of fun, but it obviously upset someone. You want to know what I think, but do you want to pay my

FA charges Fowler over his latest prank

BY STEPHEN WOOD

ROBBIE FOWLER was yester. day charged with misconduct by the Football Association for the second time in less than three months. Already facing an FA hearing on Friday concerning his contretemps with Graeme Le Saux, the Chelsea defender, Fowler now has to answer to the authorities over the controversial goal celebration that he indulged in last weekend.

Only now can the implica-tions of his "heat of the moment" prank, when he appeared to mimic the actions of a cocaine user in the FA Carling Premiership match with Everton at Anfield, be sinking in. To fall foul of the FA once may be a mistake, but twice in such a short space of time is foolhardy in the extreme.

Added to the fact that Fowler's penchant for humour is potentially offensive to certain groups, the FA is unlikely to treat him lightly. Fowler has 14 days to respond to this second charge and, if he requests another personal hearing. then his exit from Lancaster Gate on Friday, after the Le Saux case is closed, may not be so much a "goodbye", as "au

Liverpool last night said that they had fined Fowler "a very substantial amount" and warned him about his future conduct. The FA could also dock another two weeks' wages from Fowler's pay, which is believed to be around £30,000 a week. Moreover, the powers of punishment in this second case are limitless, such is the unprecedented nature of Fowler's celebrations.

He has been fined £900 by Uefa before, for wearing a Tshirt in support of the sacked Liverpool dockers, but this is more serious. The FA could ban Fowler for five or six league matches. Although the two charges will be treated sep-arately, the FA will take into account the player's previous record if they find him guilty of the second charge. Thus, if he has been punished for the Le Saux affair, the repercussions for his acts last weekend

If Fowler is banned, he could miss the end of the season and, possibly, the beginning of the next campaign. Just as he has forced his way back into the England picture. his foolishness could not have come at a worse time.

V-neck sweater and his hair combed over a receding hairline, he appeared more like a schoolteacher. In fact, Zinedine Zidane had been named world footballer of the year. It was tempting to check whether his jacket had leather elbow patches to complete the effect, but that would have been too

His choice of outfit for the Fifa gala was probably handpicked from one of Armani's finest collections for, although he does not act like one, Zidane is truly a star of the world game. He is also feled as one. Alex Ferguson, the Manchester United manager, acknowledges the midfield player's quality and he will be wary of the contribution that Zidane is likely to make for Juventus at Old Trafford tonight, when the old adversaries meet again, this time in the first leg of their European Cup

There had been some doubt over Zidane's presence in Manchester, for the knee injury that he sustained in Juventus' goals in the final against Bra-zil to help to secure the World Cup for France last July. Since then, however, his form for his club has been indifferent, prompting suggestions that his global success had affected his attitude. "It is true that I did not feel quite right after the World Cup, but I know that my head is back together again now," he said.

That is what United are worried about. Zidane has every incentive to perform to his own high standards and so, too, do his team-mates. It is 55 games since their club was knocked out of European com-

Although their defeat to Empoli, the bottom club in Serie A. last weekend would not suggest it, the Juventus team that walks out at Old Trafford tonight will be a happy collection of players.
